PLAN TO CLOSE AT 6 O'CLOCK WINS FRIENDS

Progress is being made in the movement for a 6 p. m. retail store closing in Klamath Falls on Saturday night, it was learned from officials of the Merchants' bureau Thursday. Present plans are to prepare an agreement among the merchants, to become effective on May 1.

A committee was recently appointed to work on the program, members including Nick Long, Dick Reeder, R. R. Proebstel, I. J. Olsen and Charles Roberts.

This committee has been interviewing merchants in the past few days and has reported 100 per cent cooperation among those with whom contact has been made.

Merchants supporting the movement pointed out that 6 p. m. closing has become quite general in other cities and that it gives employees of business houses a "better break."

tion during an address at Ottawa yesterday. The circumstances led to the belief here that he spoke with White House approval.

It was pointed out that LaGuardia made a hurried visit here Tuesday for a conference with President Roosevelt before departing for Canada. It was likewise considered important that before making his address at Ottawa he was quoted as saying that it would contain a line giving "the whole answer" to the question of how far the United States would go in conveying war supplies to Britain.

Stephen Early, White House press secretary, told reporters that he did not see any difference between what LaGuardia had said about patrolling 1000 miles out to sea and what had been said in piece-meal fashion by President Roosevelt in recent months.

Early emphasized that he was speaking entirely of neutrality patrols, and not convoys. He said the president had said that the patrol would be "well east" adding he believed Mr. Roosevelt had at one time mentioned 1000 miles.

Marmaduke, Unhappy Octopus, Fails to Survive Frozen Sleep

SEATTLE, April 24 (AP) — Marmaduke, the Waterfront Aquarium's prize octopus, has passed on.

Innocently a victim of a frozen sleep treatment, his remains have been consigned to Puget Sound. Ivor Haglund, aquarium proprietor, explains it this way:

Marmaduke was pinning away several months ago, nearly dead, the unlucky one in one of those triangles with two other octopi. Haglund and his waterfront friends decided there was a "bare chance" frozen sleep might revive him. He was frozen in a 500-pound block of ice.

As a last-minute thought, a hose was inserted to see that Marmaduke got some air. A tentacle was left hanging out "so we could give him a hand-shake of sympathy occasionally to show he wasn't forgotten."

"That was my idea," Haglund asserted.

Last weekend Marmaduke and his frozen couch got in the way and the fisheries people thought he should be revived by now, any way, so they hauled him down to the aquarium and left him on Iva's doorstep. Hundreds of people came to see him. "The hot sun of the past couple of days melted the ice," Haglund went on. "I had hopes the real Marmaduke would appear, in all his former beauty and vigor. But we must have overestimated the time needed for frozen sleep."

"We returned him to Puget Sound with simple yet impressive ceremonies. All that's left is a poignant memory."

Proud Athens was sacked and BURNED.

FOLLOWED then the naval battle of Salamis, in which the smaller Greek navy defeated the vastly larger but more clumsily handled Persian fleet. The ancient Greeks, like the modern British, were hardy sea fighters. Athens, freed of danger, was reoccupied.

It would be fascinating to tell here the story of the battle of Salamis, fought under the eye of Xerxes who was seated on a high point on the land. But newspaper columns must be kept short if they are to be read. Tomorrow, perhaps—or later.

Other powerful army contingents of Australians and Indians plus a whole shipload of the latest type anti-aircraft artillery from Britain, and American-made planes, he asserted, have ensured closely coordinated striking power which forms the basis of Britain's far eastern defense scheme.

These troops — declared by some observers to be the forerunner of an army of 90,000 — will take up positions in already prepared stations on the Malay peninsula.

The arrival of the Australians followed by 11 days the signing of the Japanese-soviet Russian neutrality pact — which has been seen in some quarters as freeing Japan for a push southward against Singapore, the Dutch Indies, or both.
