

Arthur James, One Of Nation's Richest Industrialists, Dies

NEW YORK, June 5 (AP)—Arthur Curtis James, whose business was in trains and whose pleasure was in yachts, died last night, one of the nation's wealthiest but least-known industrialists.

Pneumonia won a week-long siege with the 74-year-old railroad builder at Harkness pavilion. His death followed by 20 days that of his wife, the former Harriet Eddy Parsons.

Despite his financial, philanthropic, social and yachting activities, the rail Titan's quiet unobtrusiveness kept him almost completely out of the public eye, and he was better known as a yachtsman than a capitalist.

James' great wealth—at one time estimated at $350,000,000 in 40,000 miles or about a seventh of the country's total railroad mileage—stemmed from inherited copper, silver and gold mines and rail securities.

The grandson of Daniel James, founder of what is now the Phelps-Dodge mining empire, and son of D. Willis James, who helped develop Northwestern railroads, concentrated both fortures chiefly in rail investment. James' philanthropies ran into the donation of millions to educational and cultural institutions, hospitals and children's causes. He was childless.
