when she "saw a car coming straight toward her."

Marie McFarland, sitting in the back of the northbound car, told state police she remembered nothing of the accident.

"The last thing I remember, we stopped the car outside of Klamath Falls and 'Blackie' Cannalunga said, 'I've had my sleep now, and I'll take the wheel,' and he and Lee Barlow exchanged," she said.

State police said Cannalunga and the elder Barlow were in the front seat, Lee Barlow, to whom the car was registered, Mrs. McFarland and Dombroff were in the back of the five-passenger coupe. The party had driven all night from San Francisco.

Officers said there were no skid marks on the highway and it was apparent Cannalunga was unable to straighten the machine after going around the curve, sending it head-on into the Longaker car. Both machines were demolished. Mrs. Longaker was driving her sedan, which carried a Washington license, en route to Los Angeles to visit an uncle, Charles H. Kegley. The coupe bore an Oregon plate.

Bridges Witness

Cannalunga was first identified when a United States department of commerce seaman's certificate of identification issued at Seattle, was found on his person. His address was given as 3002 East 115th street, Seattle. He has long been known to those who have followed the Bridges case, as the "confusion witness" and the "disappearing or reappearing" witness.

On Wednesday, Cannalunga took the stand in San Francisco at the Bridges hearing, remained longer than anyone else and the "most talked of man at the hearing." The stocky bespectacled seaman sat with his leg cocked over an arm of the witness chair and talked informally in "salty language." He first testified April 17 that he assumed and had been told that Bridges was a communist. Early in May, the defense announced it had obtained a recanting statement from Cannalunga, in which he said he was "all hopped up" when he talked to the FBI last fall. The defense tried to subpoena him, but subpoena servers hunted in vain until the defense rested its case.

Last week, Cannalunga appeared again as a government rebuttal witness, said he was intoxicated when the defense talked to him, recalled little about the meeting, insisted the FBI had not intimidated him and what he had told them was true. He explained his absence by saying he had fled from his ship to the Olympic peninsula north of Grays Harbor, Wash., to escape communists he believed were watching him and trying to intimidate him.

"His final appearance as a witness was yesterday," said a dispatch from San Francisco. Cannalunga has one brother, John, a resident of Webster, Mass.

Lee Barlow, minor official in the sailors' union, Portland, took the stand at the Bridges hearing Wednesday and gave what was taken as "damning testimony" as a government witness. Barlow testified that in 1935, in Seattle, Bridges had told him that "the only way for a young fellow to get ahead in the labor movement today is to join the communist party." Bridges flatly denied the testimony.

Referring to his father, young Barlow is quoted from the stand: "My father told me that if I ever joined the communist party he would disown me as his son."

Ward's ambulance responded to the call from Modoc Point, and also removed Cannalunga's body to Ward's Klamath funeral home.

wanted to increase in size to inject new blood.

Both Jackson and Byrnes are known as strong administration supporters.

Jackson moved up to be attorney general after the president had named his predecessor, Frank Murphy, to the supreme court.

Byrnes has been a presidential confidante and leader of administration forces in the senate. It was considered likely that he might not go over to the court until its fall term, in order that he might continue to serve in the senate.

Although a republican, Justice Stone was one of the leading supporters on the tribunal of Roosevelt administration legislation.

He was appointed to the court by President Coolidge in 1925 after serving nine months as attorney general. He and Mr. Coolidge had been classmates at Amherst college.

Before entering the cabinet, the justice had practiced law at New York and had been dean of the Columbia university law school.

On the court he was outspoken in his support of social legislation. He once described law as "a human institution for human needs." He regarded it as anything but static.

For several years, Stone was noted as a dissenter, frequently joining the celebrated Justices Holmes, Brandeis and Cardozo in disagreeing with majority opinions.

Later, however, when so-called "liberals" dominated the tribunal, he wrote many of the famous majority decisions. He was considered the court's tax expert.

Jackson was summoned to Washington in 1934 by President Roosevelt as general counsel of the internal revenue bureau. He won a major income tax judgment against Andrew W. Mellon, former secretary of the treasury.

Defending the important registration provisions of the Utility Holding company act as SEC special counsel in 1935-36, he challenged the greatest of the great power systems, Electric Bond and Share company, and won in the supreme court.

Byrnes' nomination had been expected for months.

Appointment to the highest court in the land was the climax of a legal and legislative career which Byrnes began as a young court reporter in South Carolina. In the interim he published a newspaper, served 14 years in the house, practiced law at Spartanburg, and served in the senate since 1930.

The senator's home is Spartanburg.

Not always behind administration proposals, Byrnes neverthe-

Frankenstein, over the opposition of government attorneys who had summoned him, was allowed by Trial Examiner Charles B. Sears to read a statement declaring:

"It is my considered judgment that some of the patterns set in this hearing are ominous ones for the future of legal action in the United States.

"After an exhaustive trial in which Mr. Bridges was completely cleared of charges against him, there is a hollow mockery in this hearing, and a double jeopardy which cannot but prejudice American working men against their government," Frankenstein continued.

(After a labor department deportation hearing in 1939, Dean James M. Landis of Harvard law school, presiding examiner, said the evidence showed Bridges was "energetically radical" but it was not sufficient to prove that he was a member of the communist party at the time of those proceedings.)

GOVERNMENT WARNS ON RENT INCREASES

WASHINGTON, June 12 (AP)—Federal authorities today cautioned "rent-gouging" landlords to reduce rentals to reasonable levels voluntarily or risk legal compulsion.

The office of price administration and civilian supply disturbed by reports of rental increases ranging from five per cent to "extraordinary instances" of 100 per cent, stepped into the defense housing picture with a program designed to stabilize rents throughout the country.

In an address prepared for a meeting of the national housing inventory, Karl Borders, OPAC's rental expert, said the program was aimed particularly at defense areas where the influx of workers' and soldiers' families had been so rapid that private and public construction could not keep up with the need.

Borders reported "substantial" rent increases had been found in Bremerton, San Diego and Seattle.

Borders did not amplify his reference to legal means, other than to say that "two possible courses are open for controlling rents—voluntary control and legal control."

"There are precedents for both and both have been soundly criticized pro and con," he observed. "The office of price administration advocates and will undertake to use both as the circumstances may require."
