Strictly Informal

Seen outside Buckingham Palace in London the other day was this feminine getup. Maybe it's the rationing of clothing or something.

'This Is the Place Where--' The Story of Medicine Lake

MOUNT SHASTA — At the end of the great rim which forms a continuation of the eastern slope of Mt. Shasta lies Medicine Lake. Spring fed, its live waters shimmer over the bottom of a shallow lava saucer like quicksilver in a miner's pan. Crowding it close on all sides as though to prevent its escape are thick stands of lodge pole pine. Not far from its western end juts up the solid mass of obsidian, known as Glass mountain.

For six months of the year the goddess of the lake sleeps in an ermine robe of snow, but when June comes she arises from her virgin bed and takes her place as the consort of Mt. Shasta whose hand she seems to clasp.

All summer long she holds court to the intrepid traveler, who is bold enough to leave the California state highway No. 89 for 27 miles east of its junction with U. S. highway No. 99 in the heart of the Shasta national forest and wind in and out along the narrow dirt road which climbs slowly up to this magnificent amphitheatre, lying at 6800 feet above sea level.

It was during the summer moon of a year in the late 1790's at the western end of this lake facing the morning sun stood two Indian wickiups of exceptional size made from poles of the native lodge pole pine, covered with the tanned deer hides with the hair removed and brilliantly painted. On the larger of the two a fringe of antelope skins covered the extreme tip and lined the door and smoke flap. Fastened above the entrance were a pair of magnificent antelope horns and to right and left were painted an antelope in full flight. This was the lodge of Hu Lu Se Mo (Running Antelope), chief of the Shasta Indians.

The other lodge though smaller was more vividly painted and was the hut of the tribal Sachem or medicine man. Its lower walls were covered with symbolic figures of ferocious aspect designed to scare away any evil spirits. Above on each of the four sides was a sleeping warrior in full regalia. This was the fetish of the tribe. "He Who Sleeps in the Clouds" was their guardian and was the name which they gave to the vast mountain which towered up in the center of their domain. The spirit of the mountain was their protector.

It was the time of the annual testing of braves. There were no women in this camp. They had been left behind at the big springs on the east slope of the mountain which was the permanent home of the tribe. After the month of testing and training of the new young men of the tribe and the final ceremonial which made them warriors and at which they received their name, the women of the tribe would join them for the hunting and harvest moon.

This year was a very solemn occasion for the young lad who was the only son of Chief Running Antelope for he was to earn his name and take his place as a warrior of the tribe. During the day the young lads exhibited their abilities with bow and arrow, riding and spear throwing, running and wrestling. In the evening they gathered before the hut of the medicine man. They were there taught their tribal history as the medicine man related to them the stories which had come down through the mists of thousands of years, the young warriors who had earned their right to be known as a member of the tribe during the previous year acted out the stories as they were told.

So were preserved by word of mouth from year to year the sacred record of the Shasta Indian.

DEATH IN CHAIR
OSSINING, N. Y., June 12 (UP)—Martin (Bugsy) Goldstein and Harry (Pittsburgh Phil) Strauss, triggermen for Brooklyn's "Murder, Incorporated," were put to death in the electric chair at Sing Sing prison tonight for the slaying of Irving (Peggy) Feinstein, another gangster.

Why PAY MORE?

Here's the Reason: There is an "IMPORTANT DIFFERENCE" in Sun Glasses

Are you guilty of wearing a cheap pair of sun glasses and yet appealing your eyes by wearing objects look just as clear through them as with your own eyes?

Columbian has the precision instruments and devices to prove to you that unless your lenses conform to certain standards they are harmful. Yes! Ground and polished anti-glare lenses cost more because it costs more to make them to such high precision standards. Don't hesitate, don't be misled, demand for your eyes exactly what you pay for them. And no matter what price you pay for an inferior Sunglass it is much too high for the harm that it does to the only pair of eyes you will ever own.
