Bronco Grass Held Irsksome to Goose Valley Residents

WESTSIDE — Have you seen bronco grass, alias cheat grass? Its real name is Downy Brome, and it's definitely a resident of Goose lake valley. Just now it's at its prime, along with a lot of other weeds.

From a standpoint of annoyance to the individual, bronco grass heads the list. It isn't a very tall grass, but its seeds have that certain something that sets them apart as disturbers of the peace. Catching on stockings, trouser cuffs, and anything except the smoothest, most tightly woven materials, these seeds penetrate and prick the skin and attach themselves to clothing. Then they refuse to be detached except by painstaking picking out, one by one.

Of course, putting minute "hooks" on the seeds of bronco grass is only nature's way of seeing that the seeds get spread far and wide. But when it comes to doing the weekly washing, many a housewife has wished the grass would go jump in Goose lake.

For sheer beauty in a weed, though, there's fox-tail. Its brilliant green and purple sheen appears to be shiniest satin blowing in the wind. Fox-tail's method of spreading its seeds is, however, somewhat more picturesque than pestiferous, notwithstanding its effectiveness.

The six long, purplish-green spikes attached to each seed turn the color of ripe wheat stalks as the seeds ripen. As the seeds dry, these spikes spread out till they resemble the spokes in a wheel, and help to catch the wind as the seeds drop off. Thus the wind carries and spreads the seeds of fox-tail, with the seventh spike, a continuation of one end of the seed, comparable perhaps to the rudder of a plane.

Bly

Paul Winter, representative of the New York Life Insurance company, was in town on business this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Cooper have started business in the building until recently occupied by the club. They will run a board and room establishment.

John Beller was taken to a Klamath Falls hospital this week with what appeared to be malarial fever. Anopheles mosquitoes which are reputed to be carriers of malaria have been noted in the vicinity. Persons here say precautionary steps to prevent the mosquitoes multiplying should be taken at once. The drainage of any standing water and pouring oil on pools that are stagnant are effective methods of control. Use of a reliable insect spray in the early evening about the house should be encouraged as the anopheles attacks immediately after sunset, according to authorities.

Rollin Meyers, carpenter at the CCC camp was confined to his bed for several days last week.

Dr. and Mrs. Catts have moved into the apartment formerly occupied by Dr. Nakashima.

Dr. and Mrs. Nakashima are now located in Seattle where it is reported the doctor already has an extensive practice.

Bly is beginning to have a look of permanence that has been little in evidence in the past. Many people are buying their homes and numerous others are building new ones. Most of them, while not large, are built with modern conveniences. Lawns and flowers seem to have aroused an unusual amount of interest; fences and rock gardens and pools are being started.

Leo Moll is still improving his service station. Beginning with a very unpretentious building, Leo now has a fine plant, presenting a sparkling white frontage, modern rest rooms, cement driveways and lubrication facilities. Freddy Kobler is assistant attendant.

Warren Osborne is building three new rooms on his home in the end of town. Mrs. Osborne's father is overseeing the construction.

Basil Hall recently purchased the milking herd and dairy facilities from Jim Dixon and deliveries are being made in a new six cylinder pickup.

Wieland's Ale for your tummy? What a flavor! What an appetite!

How would you like to take natural-color photographs of all the places you visit on your vacation?

How would you like to be able, 5 years from now, to see how deeply blue that mountain lake really was?

How would you like to look back and see tall silent peaks with their heads tucked in the clouds, or the flash and crash of great green breakers on the beach, or see some famous historical spot you had visited?

Well, there are 2 ways you can do it—one is to plunk down $300 for a color camera, and the other is to stop at Union Oil stations as you drive and get a supply of natural-color post cards, free!

Now don't get those cards confused with those old fashioned chromes you bought when you were a youngster. These are modern as tomorrow, and well worth collecting.

In each section of the West, different Union Oil stations have different cards. And if you drive from Coronado to Vancouver, by the time you get back, you'll have a collection you couldn't duplicate anywhere else.

Union Oil Company gets out these cards as a service to folks who motor up and down the West. There's no charge, no obligation. Just say "Post Cards"—and you get 'em. Kinda nice of Union Oil Company, I think.

Ft. Lewis Troops Shower Girls With 'Yoo Hoo' Notes

OLYMPIA, July 14 (AP) — Soldiers sometimes have to walk these days for yelling at girls, but still —

As trucks from the California war games hauled soldiers through Olympia on the way to Fort Lewis yesterday, girls eating lunch in the city park were bombarded — with paper airplanes, apples with holes bored in them, and just plain rocks. From each missile, a note dangled.

One of them read: "Dear Miss Washington: "How lovely you are! Please write to this lonely soldier and help national defense. "P. S. Don't tell Lieut. Gen. Ben Lear."
