servers of Latin American affairs to be minor in comparison to the psychological impact of the agreement.

The very fact that Argentina and the United States had at last reached a mutually satisfactory trade accord was seen as significant, since for generations the two republics have stood at the opposite diplomatic poles when not actually at loggerheads. Argentina is a proud, well organized republic, traditionally jealous of her influence in South America, and often critical of United States big business methods in the rest of Latin America. The United States frequently has sought Argentine collaboration, but until the present "good neighbor" era has sought to impose her own terms.

surface rather than risk being fired upon by a prospective victim.

Under the special rule granted for consideration of the measure, the debate will run throughout tomorrow's session and for one hour on Friday. Leaders said they expected the house would pass the repealer well before nightfall of that day.

The arming of merchant ships moved a step nearer actuality today with approval by the house foreign affairs committee of the repeal of a neutrality law provision which now prevents such armament.

Committee members said there was no change in the simple resolution originally considered. There was no record vote, members added.

EMBEZZLEMENT AT BANK CHARGED

SACRAMENTO, Calif., Oct. 15 (Clifford Sevi, 46, cashier-secretary of the Butte Valley State bank in Dorris, Siskiyou county, Thursday will be given a hearing before United States commissioner Adella McCabe on the charge of having embezzled $1000 in bank funds on November 22, 1939.

Sevi was arrested yesterday by Hayden Saunders, United States deputy marshal, and posted bond of $7500 pending his arraignment. Bank examiners are going over the institution's books in a search for additional discrepancies.

William G. Hagelstein, president of the Butte Valley State bank, stated Wednesday that the bank is fully insured against any losses by embezzlement.

It was stated that Sevi is no longer connected with the Dorris bank.

Cooking Classes Planned at Two Schools Thursday

Community cooking classes are being held at the Pelican school cafeteria and at the Shasta school cafeteria Thursday afternoon, October 16, from 2 p. m. to 4 p. m.

At the Pelican school, Mrs. W. E. Lloyd and Mrs. C. D. Weger will present the demonstration, and at the Shasta school Mrs. Herbert Landis and Mrs. P. D. Schroeder will demonstrate. The cooking of fresh vegetables will be featured. New recipes, new ways of cooking vegetables to keep the food nutritious in the vegetables will be presented.

There is no charge and the public is urged to attend.

Klamath Indians Celebrate 77th Year at Reservation first school was started on the reservation. Only one pupil of the first class, Stonewall Jackson, remains living.

David Hill was the first missionary on the reservation, arriving in 1878 at Williamson River. The old church is still standing, although it has been repaired many times.

Captain Emery was appointed Indian superintendent by the government in 1885, Wright said, and he achieved much progress during his stay in office. In 1887 surveys were made to establish the reservation boundaries, but they were not well received by the tribe.

The last salmon was taken from Upper Klamath lake in 1909 when a dam blocked further entrance of the fish. It was pointed out that the government is now considering reimbursing the Indians for the loss of salmon.

Judge Levi Walker, in reviewing the history of the treaty, told the audience that the tribe has lived up to the treaty but the government has changed it from time to time. Main reason for differences with the government was that at the time the treaty was written neither group had definite understanding of what the other meant, because of language difficulties.

Edward B. Ashurst, former Klamath county circuit judge, greeted the assembly in the Klamath tribal language. He reviewed his life in connection with the reservation and recalled many kind acts the tribe had done for him.

"If I had a flower for every kindness the Klamaths have extended to me, this council hall would be a wilderness of flowers," Ashurst said. The Klamath people are endowed with all the attributes needed for successful living, he said. "I have traveled among many people in the United States, but few are as adept at farming and making homes as the Klamath Indians."

Rancher Reportedly Takes Own Life

Edgar Lewis Furber, 55, for the past 31 years a rancher of the Miller Island district, was found shot through the head in the bathroom of his home at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning by members of his family.

Mr. Furber had been in ill health and a semi-invalid for four years, according to Dr. George H. Adler, county coroner, who reported the man a suicide. Mr. Furber is said to have shot himself through the head with a 30-30 rifle.

At its extreme points, the continent of Africa is nearly equal in length and breadth.

Ashurst sounded a note of caution when he said:

"You have only one enemy in this country, and that enemy is strong and powerful. That enemy is old John Barleycorn."

"You owe it to yourselves," he continued, "to drive from your land this enemy. You as members of this great tribe owe it to yourselves to combat this only enemy of the Klamath reservation."

Ashurst praised the leadership of Superintendent Courtwright and urged the tribe to cooperate with him.

The meeting was followed by a barbecue dinner, and a dance was planned for the evening.

Airbase Chief Lauds City on Airport Work

Thomas and O. H. Schrader, the resident engineer for the army engineers in charge of the airport project, showed Colonel Stromme the work that is being done under CAA appropriation. He appeared particularly impressed with the general level character of the terrain, the lack of obstructions in the airport area, and the deep (20-inch) base which underlies each of the new runways at the field.

In his talk Wednesday noon, he mentioned the huge B-19, world's biggest airplane, and added that runways being built at the Klamath field would accommodate that ship.

"The extent to which aviation has stirred the popular enthusiasm is astonishing and can only mean a more rapid expansion in the years that lie ahead," Colonel Stromme told the audience.

"In the field aviation, more perhaps than in any other field of activity, the need is compelling that this great land of ours should not only keep abreast, but ahead of the rest of the world. Future generations of American citizens must be able to make the fullest use of the countless advantages which aviation offers to our national life. The flag of the republic must be borne high. Events which have shaken the foundations of the nations of the world have demonstrated that national power requires that we look to the air if our flag is to remain proudly supreme."

Turning to the war in Europe, Colonel Stromme said: "Great efforts are being made to draw us into this conflict. Those who study the situation carefully must recognize the grave danger in either standing idly by or rushing madly in. Neither method will save us or protect our civilization. I am of the opinion that the only sure way to save this country from a war is a strong united America; so strong on land, on sea and in the air that no international buccaner would seek to undermine our institutions or loot our possessions.

"The airplane has revolutionized warfare. It has made the aggressor more powerful. It has made the butchering of women and children a part of war. The world has not yet found the defensive answer, but we are searching for it and if we find it, as we hope we will, we may be able to turn the whole fate of the world.

"The United States, in the field of aviation, has met the challenge of the world's greatest aeronautical nations and has won unquestioned supremacy to the extent there is scarcely a major airline in the world that does not fly American-built planes.

"If we Americans are now forced in the defense of our liberty and our way of life to turn our aeronautical genius from the pursuit of peace to the art of war in the air, let me assure you that we can and will meet the challenge in the confidence that the same American ability, that same engineering genius, that same productive efficiency will be equal to the task of achieving supremacy in the field of aerial defense."

Liquor prices in Canada appear about the same as in the United States — including Scotch.

WHILE on the subject of Canada, they have a new twist on the sightseeing business in Quebec, whose narrow, crooked, one-way streets are calculated to bring strange drivers to a state of collapse in about three blocks.

The guides hire out to drive YOUR car and show you the town. After 15 minutes on your own, you're ready to stop in the middle of the street and yell for their help.

SPEAKING from memory, and therefore not guaranteeing accuracy, this writer would say offhand that Oregon and Nevada are about the only states in the Union not levying sales taxes. Practically everywhere else you get a tax tacked onto what you buy and your pockets sag constantly with the weight of pennies. Here and there you get tax tokens as well.

In Canada there is some sort of sales tax which no American traveler has yet been able to fathom and in addition there is a five per cent hospital tax levied by the hotels.

You come to feel in the course of a reasonably extended jaunt that you a citizen of every state and every province. At least you've paid taxes in most of them.

FROM the Midwest, you do your bit in paying for every bridge built since Washington had to ferry over the Delaware. Some of them look old enough to be falling down a la London Bridge, but you pay your toll just the same.

Out West we're accustomed to paying for the privilege of crossing big bridges, especially those of us in Southern Oregon and Northern California who go often to San Francisco. But back East you pungle up to cross about every creek too wide to jump over.

You get in a little while so you reach for your change pocket every time you see a bridge of any sort looming ahead of you. The tariff runs from two to four bits a crack.

The Canadians are particularly adept at collecting bridge tolls. To leave Quebec and get into and out of Montreal, a distance of about 200 miles, costs three bucks Canadian.

You pay a half dollar to cross streams you could throw a Herford calf over without straining yourself.
