

PRIORITY RULE CLOGS LUMBER PLANT OUTPUT

PORTLAND, Oct. 29 (P)—Pacific northwest lumbermen warned today that priority orders threatened the military construction program.

With unfilled defense orders still on hand, the mills are being clogged by lumber that has no market since announcement of a priority order against home construction, they told the Oregon Economic Council.

Already two Oregon plants have announced a partial shutdown, and Col. W. B. Greeley, Seattle, secretary-manager of the West Coast Lumbermen's association, said many others might follow.

The supply priority and allocations board recently prohibited construction of houses except those under $6000 in designated defense areas.

Kenneth McIntosh, official of the West Oregon Lumber company of Portland, which went from a five to a two-day work week, said wholesale cancellations of non-defense orders followed the SPAB ruling, and lumber piled up in the mill.

The army, he explained, usually wants only a special section of each log. But, he added, "We must move, or dispose of the whole log, otherwise operation may become impossible."

"The problem is how to keep in production of defense items and at the same time dispose of the rest of the log against two difficulties: first, the curtailment of normal Atlantic coast space (in ships), by two-thirds and, second, the drying up of normal non-defense housing and farm building under the priority order of the SPAB," Greeley said.

The shortage of ships to carry lumber to market has been critical since last winter, when the maritime commission withdrew a number of freighters from intercoastal trade. Lumber has mounted on docks, and storage space is now at a premium.

The Economic Council, an advisory group named by Gov. Charles A. Sprague of Oregon, saw a way to ease the storage situation, recommending to the maritime commission that ships now being built on the west coast carry lumber on their way east to Atlantic ocean service. The council said it had been informed the ships might otherwise go back empty.

The council also appealed to the SPAB to modify its ruling on housing construction, and McIntosh asked the SPAB to clarify a statement on curtailment of materials for non-defense activities, which, he said, "Threw a scare into private construction."
