"And Not Cost Too Much"

By EARL WHITLOCK

One came the other day, to make funeral arrangements in advance of need. Away and away in advance, I should say and hope, for he is a man in the prime of life and in the best of health. But he said one thing I should like to pass on to you.

"If I were considering just myself in this thing," he declared, "I'd pick out the cheapest service you've got and call it plenty good. But I have to consider my family and how they will remember the ceremony. You know my situation. I'm not well-off but not a pauper—just an average guy. I want you to help me to select a service that will be a beautiful memory for the folks and that won't cost too much."

What a splendid summing up! How sensible and kind and thoughtful!

And how well it fits in with our policy of always—ALWAYS—helping patrons to find a service which will be beautiful to memory and which WILL NOT COST TOO MUCH!

—And this no matter how low the price must be held to avoid being "too much."

Next Monday Mr. Whitlock of the Earl Whitlock Funeral Home will comment on Armistice day.

Counter-Organization of Employers Needed, Claim

NEW YORK, Nov. 3 (AP) — William H. Davis, chairman of the national defense mediation board, said last week that mature collective bargaining in labor disputes could be reached only after employers counter-organized on an industry-wide basis.

"The individual employer is confronted with an industry-wide organization of labor and realizes, often in a kind of a panic, that he has the short end of the stick," he said in an address prepared for a luncheon of survey associates.

"That is, perhaps, the situation in our principal mass production industries today."

Davis said that as the defense industry developed "labor relations perhaps passed the stage of adolescence in some American industries, but in no important mass production industry such as steel, automobiles, rubber and chemicals."

In delivering the speech over the NBC Blue network, Davis made several departures from the prepared text. Among several deletions was the above paragraph.

"In these industries labor relations are in the troublesome stage of lousy immaturity, that state in the growth of organization which is always the period of greatest strife," he continued.

The organization which he addressed describes itself as a non-partisan, non-political society chartered to investigate and report problems concerning the general welfare of the nation.

He told the meeting that the NDMB had suggested two ways to settle the Captive mine strike which ended today when John L. Lewis accepted President Roosevelt's proposal. The suggestions, he said, were by voluntary arbitration and by bipartisan negotiations between fully empowered equal representatives of labor and management.

"Such methods, are in my opinion, wholly in accord with our democratic principles and appropriate a peaceful and orderly settlement of the dispute," he said.

Davis then added to his prepared address this statement on the Captive mine strike:

"Now the president has proposed that with the men back at work the issue will be submitted to the full national defense mediation board for arbitration with the understanding that neither side agrees in advance to accept the award. And the men have been sent back to work today."

"This procedure is also in accord with well established anti-familial practice. It is in fact the same procedure as that now being followed by the president's fact-finding commission in the railroad industry and it is the procedure followed by the labor court of Great Britain in all its cases."

"The country may be assured in this case the mediation board will be as fair as fearless Americans can be."

"There is another type of labor dispute, the so-called jurisdictional dispute, arising because of the overlapping of jurisdiction granted or approved by the central labor authority. They are family quarrels, and a strike resulting from them is essentially a breaking down of the organization itself."

"I think no one will disagree with me when I say that in this time of emergency such disputes should be settled within the family, and that interruption of defense production because of such family quarrels is inexcusable."

As examples of "troubles" that went hand in hand with the immaturity of labor organization, Davis cited the strikes of Allis-Chalmers, International Harvester, Northwest Lumber, and North American Aviation.

CHANGES NOTED IN WALLPAPER STYLE

Fashions in wallpaper, like fashions in clothes, change from year to year. The changes are gradual, and not always noticeable at first glance, but change they do!

You might suppose that a Colonial wallpaper, for example would remain unaltered from season to season, but this is not the case. Subtle changes in both design and color give new life to ideas that are centuries old, so that your Colonial house, for instance, while keeping an unmistakable eighteenth century charm, is nevertheless as up to the minute as today's newspaper.

There is a definite trend toward patterns that have dignity plus imagination—a new version of tried and proven Colonial designs that are eminently suitable for the contemporary American home.

Not only are the new papers as beautiful as the antique ones, but they are practical as well. Imperial papers, as an example, are made washable and fast to light so that their beauty will endure and you have no fear of extravagance when you decide to use them in your home.

Also new in the field of wallpaper is the assembling of two and sometimes three papers. There has always been great difficulty in finding papers for adjoining rooms which have a decoratively sound relation to each other. Now, with sympathetic foresight, this problem has been overcome.

Incorporating all of these new ideas for decoration, Imperial papers are now on display at the General Paint store.

BRITISH SEEKING TO GUARD SECRETS

LONDON, Nov. 3 (AP) — British officials were reliably reported today to be gravely concerned over the freedom with which military information is circulated in the United States and to be seeking further steps by Washington to keep war matters secret.

The British, it was said, have frequently pointed out to the American embassy stories given out in the United States which the British say provided important tips to Germany.

President Roosevelt's announcement October 24 that the OPM after November 1 would keep secret the details of war production was seen here as one fruit of the British complaints.

Among recent disclosures which the British think United States individuals should not have made:

That United States tank production would not reach 2000 a month until June, 1942.

That Boston was designated as a loading port for supplies to Russia and that these would go by the north Atlantic route, a maritime commission announcement which the government later said was incorrect.

That the United States would manufacture a new type of torpedo for the British in testimony before the house appropriations subcommittee.

It was also said data on the numbers and types of airplanes manufactured for Britain had been given out until banned by the president.

London took the stand that too much information given in closed committee hearings in Washington was being published and annoyance was expressed at the London newspaper story from Washington which gave the tipoff on the Roosevelt-Churchill Atlantic meeting.

(The story forecasting the Roosevelt-Churchill meeting was written by the Washington correspondent of the London Daily Mail and cabled to London, and was distributed in the United States only after being recalled from London through the British censorship. The British criticism today apparently is directed against the "leak" in Washington which gave the Daily Mail its tip.)

Angeleno Sues Self in Court, Wins Judgment

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 3 (AP) — Rheinhardt K. Kriens, 75, sued himself in superior court—and won.

Kriens explained to the court that two years ago, threatened with litigation, he deeded five city lots to a fictitious person, Anna M. Sneirk, and that now that he really wants to dispose of the property, he had to sue Miss Sneirk to clear title.

Kriens won the suit after pointing out that Sneirk was his own name spelled backward.

Christian Science

"Everlasting Punishment" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, November 2.

The Golden Text was, "Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people" (Prov. 14:34).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting" (Gal. 6:7,8).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following correlative passages from the Christian Science textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures" by Mary Baker Eddy: "The design of Love is to reform the sinner. If the sinner's punishment here has been insufficient to reform him, the good man's heaven would be a hell to the sinner. They, who know not purity and affection by experience, can never find bliss in the blessed company of Truth and Love simply through translation into another sphere" (p.35).

Italian Crewmen Given Sentences In Federal Prison

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 3 (AP) Federal Judge James A. Fee sentenced 15 officers and men of the Italian motorship Leme to varying terms of two to five years in a federal penitentiary Saturday.

Several of the crew, arrested when the government seized the vessel last March, gave the fascist salute as sentences were pronounced. They were convicted last month of damaging the Leme's machinery.

The judge denied a plea for leniency on the ground that the Italians were acting under orders.

"I repudiate the idea that any alien in our borders can act on orders of a foreign government and be relieved of responsibility for commitment of a crime," he said.

Severest sentences were meted to Capt. Giovanni Polonio, five year, and First Officer Giovanni Polli and Engineer Umberto Muri, four years.

Thirty-seven other crewmen, not indicted, are held at a detention camp near Missoula, Mont. The convicted Italians' attorney said he would appeal.

in other words

by JOHN CLINTON

My favorite magazine—Reader's Digest—had a honey of a story in it the other day about a motorist who drove into a service station at Laguna Beach and asked for 10 gallons of gas.

Instantly the men in the station sprang to work, wiping the windshield, filling the tires, checking the radiator, and giving him a big sales routine. Boy, stuff was going on. The driver then paid his bill and drove off down the coast.

Shortly he drove back. "Say," he asked, "did any of you fellows put gas in my car?" The boys went into a conference, finally came out of it and admitted it—nobody had!

Well that tickled me a good deal, because it illustrates how the service-station can wag the purchase-dog! But that's why Union Minute Men are so popular. They, too, will deal out swift service. But they don't forget what you came in for.

Union Minute Men never slow you down, either, with service when you're in a rush. Nor do they try to sell you some special deal just because you have to get gas. They match their service to your need. And what a difference it makes.

And I am fully convinced that the tremendous increase in business at Union Oil stations is due in no small part to the boys in white—the Union Oil Minute Men. So, look, next time—stop at the sign of the big orange and blue 76 and see for yourself!
