

SECOND FRONT HELD NEEDED TO AID REDS

slaughter and plunder were the Hitler policy, and therefore "the policy of the red army is to destroy the Germans to the very last man."

Mentioning in passing that the French government had sold out to Hitler for fear of a revolution, Stalin said "only the Hitlerite madmen can think they can build a new order under the present conditions in Europe."

"The new order is ready to collapse at any moment and bury Hitler in its ruins."

Stalin said Russian losses were 350,000 men killed, "378,000 missing without a trace," and 1,026,000 wounded.

He said the soviet rear never had been so strong as at this moment and that red army morale was infinitely higher than that of the German army.

The German army has been forced to construct new bases on unfriendly territory, whereas "our army is fighting on its own territory," the Russian premier asserted, "with our people exerting every effort to keep it supplied."

"It is unnecessary to add that the blitzkrieg has failed."

He declared that "another reason for the temporary red army setbacks is the shortage of tanks."

"It can not be said that our tank industry is not working well; it is working very well for its size, but the Germans can throw in more tanks, as they have not only their own factories but also the factories of Czechoslovakia, France and the countries of Europe which they occupy."

"Our aviation is superior in quality; our pilots have proved themselves. We have fewer planes, but the quality of our tanks and planes is superior."

In the meantime Gardner has been able to have an extension of time inasmuch as he is not able to go ahead with the job, awaiting the priority ruling.

U. S. Committed To Free World, Roosevelt Says

Hitler and that American armament output is satisfactory.

The president stressed the need he saw not only for victory over Hitler but for planning for a better world after the war.

He quoted from the Atlantic charter formulated by himself and Prime Minister Churchill of Britain to impress his listeners both before him and those over the world receiving the speech by radio that "there must be a more abundant life for the masses of the people of all countries," including "improved labor standards, economic advancement and social security."

"There must be no place in the post-war world for special privilege for either individuals or nations," Mr. Roosevelt said, adding that all states great or small, victor or vanquished, must have, in the words of the charter, "access, on equal terms, to the trade and to the raw materials of the world which are needed for their economic prosperity."

The president said that the people of the United States had so far been called upon for extremely limited sacrifices, but that they were "beginning to feel the pinch of war."

To illustrate, he said, the workers of Manitowish, Wis., had had to sacrifice their jobs in making aluminum utensils so that planes may be sent to those resisting aggression and the rubber workers in a hundred scattered plants had had to forego opportunities for jobs "that there may be ships to carry planes and tanks to Liverpool and Archangel and Rangoon."

Such sacrifices, he noted, were nothing compared with those of the people of Britain, China and Russia and those of occupied countries from Norway to Greece.

The president paid a special tribute to the men and women of the lands which have lost their independence against a "brutal force which, however powerful, will be forever inadequate to crush the fight for freedom."

"As far as we in the United States are concerned," he continued, "that struggle shall not be in vain. The spite of Britain, of China and of Russia receive the full support of the free peoples of the Americas. The people of this country insist upon their right to join in the common defense."

At this point Mr. Roosevelt touched on labor strife in the United States with these words: "To be sure, there are still some misguided among us—thank God they are but a few—both industrialists and leaders of labor, who place personal advantage above the welfare of their nation."

"There are still a few who place their little victories over one another above triumph over Hitler. There are still some who place the profits they make from civilian orders above their obligation to the national defense."

"There are still some who deliberately delay defense output by using their 'economic power' to force acceptance of their demands, rather than use the established machinery for the mediation of industrial dispute."

"Yes, they are but few. They do not represent the great mass of American workers and employers."

tol, Charleston, apparently was confined to the single unit.

The gas distillation unit was located between two other, larger buildings, helping to confine the effects of the explosion and fire.

Officials of the Carbide and Carbon Chemicals corporation, whose plant is one of the largest in the multi-million dollar Klamath valley chemical industry, could not be reached for an estimate of damage or official check on the number of dead and injured.

A member of the medical staff at one Charleston hospital where an explosion casualty was taken said he was told the "heat was so intense in the vinylite department of the plant that it was impossible to get near it."

Vinylite, a resin plastic, is one of the chief products of the chemical plant.

The latest change added to those lost, the name of William James McKeever Jr., seaman second class, Detroit.

Rechecks of the crew list, the navy said, further revealed that Kenneth Courtland Oaks, radio man third class, Oshkosh, Wis., was among survivors picked up after the attack in the north Atlantic. He had not previously been reported aboard the vessel.

An earlier revision today raised the toll from 97 to 98. The revisions together raised the crew list to 146, of whom 45 were rescued.

LITVINOFF NAMED ENVOY TO AMERICA

time advocate of soviet collaboration with the western democracies, will become Russian ambassador to the United States at an early date.

Authoritative sources said today that Litvinoff, former peoples' commissar for foreign affairs, had been chosen to succeed Constantin Oumansky, who is now in Russia.

Litvinoff, when foreign minister, personally negotiated with President Roosevelt at Washington for United States recognition of Russia in 1933, after a lapse in diplomatic relations of about 16 years. Since 1933, however, he has been in the background of soviet politics due to his opposition to collaboration with Germany.

Besides Oumansky there has been only one other soviet ambassador to Washington, Alexander A. Troyanovsky, who took over the post immediately upon recognition eight years ago.

During his term of office as foreign affairs commissar, Litvinoff was the outstanding exponent of soviet collaboration with the western democracies. It was his voice that was most often heard in Geneva, during sessions of the league of nations, urging united action against aggressors and proclaiming the "indivisibility of peace."

Interesting Stories About Klamath Animals and Efforts in Their Behalf

By Ida Momyer Odell

WHAT DID ROSCOE DO?

Roscoe is dead. What did Roscoe do to deserve death? His wiggling little body ran under the barbed wire fence into a field where his four little paws scampered delightedly over the warm earth, feeling with ecstasy the soft comfort of ground after the hard city pavements, so tiresome to little paws.

His mistress called him, for she saw signs "No Trespassing" on the fence, and good little fellow that he was, he turned to obey. He unfortunately couldn't read, or he would never have gone under the fence, even though there did not seem to be a thing he could harm. Only a man with a gun, and Roscoe had not been taught to fear guns.

As Roscoe padded back towards his mistress, five shots were fired in rapid succession. Roscoe wasn't afraid—he was busy obeying orders: Only when shot filled the poor, soft little body, did the tiny fellow realize—too late—that men with guns could be enemies.

Roscoe is dead. The little shot-torn body was brought tenderly to town and aid was sought, but nothing could save little Roscoe.

What did Roscoe do to deserve death? Did he chase livestock? His mistress says not.

There is no excuse for town dogs chasing livestock on enclosed land but there is a law to deal with such cases and if we have laws should they not be resorted to instead of taking the law in our own hands? We have a dog control board which receives reports of predatory dogs and takes action.

We have not heard of any report having been made to this board of viciousness on the part of this little fellow. We still wonder what Roscoe did to deserve such a cruel death.

In the September issue of the Kiwanis magazine is "A Dog's Prayer for His Master," by Will Judy, which is a beautiful thing. Mr. Judy is editor of Dog World and the November issue has a short article by this lover of dogs and a gifted writer entitled "Thankfulness," which we quote in part: "May every home in America on Thanksgiving day have a good dog at ease in the corner and a big turkey boiling in the pot. If not all of us have grown in material possession during the year, may we have shown progress in things of the spirit regardless of the size of our purse. Let us be thankful this year, among other things, for our dogs, for the companionship and unselfish devotion they give us daily without thought of wages, and particularly at this time when much of the world is seeking to kill one another."—Will Judy.

Our sympathy to Roscoe's mistress whose Thanksgiving day will have no little Roscoe in the corner at ease, with a loving wag of a little tail to brighten her day.

Park Warehouse Plans Submitted By Engineer

City Engineer E. A. Thomas submitted final plans for the Moore park warehouse to members of the park board in session Tuesday. Plans call for a rubble stone finish, large casement windows and a galvanized iron roof to be painted in keeping with the surrounding territory.

Board members approved Thomas' plans and it was announced that work would be started as soon as WPA labor is available. Rock will come from the city quarry.

Thomas was authorized to obtain bids from three different firms for the purchase of power driven lawn mowers. Information on the machines was previously obtained from park boards in Portland and San Francisco.
