TRACK MEET

The Oregon State Beavers, al-ready complete with three football crowns (including the championship of the Willamette valley) are being chosen by ex-perts, both so-called and real, for the northern division cage wittle. Chief among the pickers is Hector Edmundson, the Washing-ton fella who just returned from an epochal exhibition tour of the bigger eastern centers. Hector, whose style of play both amazed and chagrined the flatlanders, eastern centers. Hector says the Beavers are the team to beat.

"In the past our defense has been more effective against WSC than against the Beavers," he said fearfully, "and after watch-ing OSC in the east we know the bob we're up against." Hector's Huskies walloped the New York University Violets, 72-38, in the garden on their eastern invasion, thereby setting a new arena record and confusing metropolitan basket circles at one and the same time.

The confusion arose around the Washington's fire-horse meth-od of play which upset the set-up od of play which upset the set-up under which most eastern coaches have schooled their pu-pils. Heretofore, following the successful set-shot, deliberate practice of the sensational Black-birds of Long Island university, the east has overlooked the fast break which Edmundson's mas-todonic marksmen used to such excellent advantage. The galloping offense was first demonstrated by Hobby Hob-son's Oregons back a few years when the Ducks captured the national title but it evidentity didn't sink in. Now the big-national title but it evidently didn't sink in. Now the big-towners are more impressed. What got 'em mostly was the Huskies' ability to pop the ball in the hoop from all angles pro-pelled by just one paw. Which made it almost impossible to de-vise a defense. Heetor was asked about the

Hector was asked about the effect this style of play would have on the game in general. "I dunno," he said, "the whole thing may develop into strictly a test of offensive stamina. You But, if it does, my boys will be ready to ride the boards as fast ready to ride the box as the next fellow."

In the planning of the build-ing, the county board and architect had not foreseen basketball The basement was low, cut up with rooms, furnace and wood storage space, only the third floor had any possibilities.

We seized upon it at once-four posts slopping up to form the cupola support slanted across the central playing area of the court, so we were not to get homesick for trees. Later installation of a fire stand pipe and hose reel near the center ring made the picture complete.

Until the weather permitted outside sports, every noon and usually until dusk in the evening (no lights were wired in on the third floor) games were arranged between various groups, classes and "choose-up" teams

Students Double

The fall enrollment in 1906 The fail enrotiment in 1900 gave us another doubled student body. This, the class of 1910, brought a fine group of athletes into the high school. Austin Hayden, Oscar Wright, J. F. (Junior) Daggett, Virgil Noland, and many others. But these names bear mention at this place as being more closely identified with the title of this article. Class games became the rage and the freshmen of the 1910 class and the 1909 or sophomore class became bitter foes. The juniors or 1908 class had few boys but Perry O. DeLap and Verne Clift made up for the lacking numbers so when the frosh and juniors consolidated team to challenge the slight su-periority of the 1909 "five," honors became about even.
