Weds His Housekeeper

You see him, a middle-aged bachelor, keen in business and owner of a big place near the city. Yet with all his money and friends, the problem of housekeeper gives him no end of trouble. One woman seemed not able to serve such dishes as he would put before his guests. Another failed to keep the place in order. And so it went.

He would try this: he penned ten rules and posted them up in his kitchen. Then he ran a want-ad and out of the answers chose a likely looking miss who said she would keep his Ten Commandments, as he called them. This she did and the man was happy in his find.

The months slipped by and a friendship grew up between the two. Out of it blossomed a love affair and the man and maid became husband and wife. He spoke of the ten rules, there on the wall. And would she still keep them?

"My dear," said she, "Of old it was my duty to live up to them but now my love to you will urge me to do far beyond what those laws may say."

In words like these, Dr. H. A. Ironside, pastor of the Moody Church, Chicago, in his new book, "THE LAMP OF PROPHECY," states the difference between law and grace. The law demands of us but grace fills the heart until it overflows in loving service. Whoever serves the law to win salvation, is under a curse, for "Cursed is everyone that continueth not in all things that are written in the book of the law to do them."

—BIBLE. One slip on any one of the Ten Commandments and all is lost. "But Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the laws, being made a curse for us." Gal. 3:13.

Every life is lived on one of three levels:
First Level—Here live such as serve the world, the flesh and the devil. At the end, they pass into a Christless grave.

Two—These count Christ as their Saviour from the guilt and penalty of sin, but they run the world. They are the restless sheep. They have not the peace, joy and fruitage of their Lord.

Three—Here are the redeemed who have given Christ a quit-claim deed to all that they are or hope to be. He floods their hearts with grace and truth. Out of their lives flow rivers of living water.
THREE LEVELS — One: The lost. Two: The saved but joyless. Three: Fulfilled and filled with peace; love; joy. On which level do you live?

Interesting Stories About Klamath Animals and Efforts in Their Behalf
By Ida Momyer Odell

BIRDS
Over the telephone comes a question: "What can I feed the robins?"
Over our desk comes a request "Write an article asking the hunters not to kill our hawks, herons and owls."

Altogether, it appears that this should be a bird week. Have you spare time and a car? Call Dan Eastman, president of the Klamath-Modoc Izaak Walton league and he will tell you where you can get feed and where to distribute it to save the quail and pheasants starving from the hard storms. We sometimes get the idea that game commissions preserve wildlife only for the purpose of killing when the season opens. This is not the case. The Izaak Walton league is for the preservation of wildlife and through its efforts countless wild lives are saved which will never fall to a hunter's gun, so help this league preserve our birds during these freezing nights and deep snows which have covered all wild seeds and weeds.

What to feed the robins? We confess it rather stumped us. Personally, we never met a robin who didn't appear, like our blessed marines, to have "the situation well in hand" whether he had just stopped over for hotel accommodations or had returned for the summer. However, we called Mrs. Small and she says, "I've seen a robin eat a hamburger and frozen apples. We think that is carrying the frozen food theory right into the bird world, but anyway it is an easy diet to provide and we are confident Mrs. Small would simply say apples but for the fact that any apple put out now quickly becomes frozen food and the robins like them as well or better frozen than fresh. We tried a little hamburger on our bantams thinking they missed the bugs but we have to confess they didn't seem as thrilled over the treat as we had hoped."

Our farmer friend tells of hunters on her land relating with much satisfaction that "we killed a hawk for you," never realizing that for every chicken a hawk manages to capture he devours countless field mice, ground squirrels and small rodents of all kinds. Hawks and herons keep busy all day at this task which is so profitable for both themselves and the farmer, and then the owl takes over at night. So our farmer friend puts in a plea—save the hawks, the herons and the owls and let them keep up the good work of destroying the busy rodents which eat the grain and cut the dykes.

Let's not grudge a bit of grain to the sparrows this winter. After all they do get so hungry. Those bantams which dined the hamburger with a dog-kennel originally) with a wee door to go in and out and these days the chicks have been taking all meals indoors. It is interesting to see the sparrows dodging in after a grain of wheat or a kernel of corn and the rascals have formed the habit of washing in a flock on the lilac bush for breakfast. They know after the chickens are fed there will be a handful of grain for them. One is particularly fearless and one snowy morning long ago she came hopping around the door to the chicken kennel when she saw us coming with the feed, her tail dragging in the snow, tiny footprints everywhere, so we stooped down in the snow and held out a handful of wheat and Miss Sparrow had her breakfast right then before the chickens had a bite. She would take a grain of wheat from the hand, stand back and crack it open, chew for a second or two, then back for another grain.

Preservation of wild canaries is well repaid to the family which takes pride in their lawn, and can save many hours of dandelion digging. These beautiful little birds love the tender green buds in the center of the plant, which allowed to mature forms the white balloon of feathery seeds. Any lawn lover who can entice some families of these attractive little feathered friends to make homes on the premises will be paid big dividends.

Suet and grain put out for the birds should be in a large tray preferably of wood, and placed above reach of foraging dogs. Suet should be cut into small pieces. The lovely little snowbirds or junco will be passing through before long now and a tray of suet and grain will lighten their journey and preserve many of their lives.

As we sit down to our well supplied tables these cold winter mornings let us think of the birds and put out a tray.

Wool Men Praise Game Commission

LA GRANDE, Jan. 10 (AP)—The Oregon Wool Growers association praised the state game commission yesterday for its method of harvesting annual increases in big game.

Stockmen and sportsmen shared alike in the benefits, a resolution said.

The association asked that control of predatory animals be increased in order to protect other wild life and to conserve domestic animals, which, stockmen said, are guarded inadequately because of a shortage of help.

Game Commissioner George Aiken objected to a proposal for restoration of a coyote bounty on the grounds it would be expensive and ineffective.

"There is too much temptation to operate on a sustained yield basis," he commented.
Lieut. Malcolm E. Bauer, of the Fort Lewis public relations staff, former city editor of the Portland Oregonian, and Cap. Robert Paine of the marine corps said that if cooperation could be maintained censorship probably would remain on a voluntary basis.

Conference members also heard discussions of rationing, taxation and wage and hour laws on the opening day.
