		NOTICE OF FINAL ACCOUNT
		Notice is hereby given that I have filed my final account and report as administratrix of the estate of Robert B. Hough, deceased, and the judge of the circuit court of the state of Oregon, for Klamath county, has fixed ten o'clock in the forenoon of February 19, 1942, and the court room of said court in the court house at Klamath Falls, Oregon, as the time and place when and where any person may present any objections or exceptions to anything therein contained.
		Retreat of Germans in Russia, a Ghastly Tale
		By ILYA EHRENBURG Soviet War Correspondent MALOYAROSLAVETS, Russia, Jan. 20 (UP)—The German road of retreat is a road of death. That is made crystal clear here behind the front southwest of Moscow, where the Russians, advancing in a snowstorm and biting frosts, are covering six to 10 miles a day, fighting as they go.
		The corpses of the Germans lie along the road. The frosts have preserved them in lifelike poses. One grasps a hand grenade. Another just manages to hold a rifle. A third shields his face with his hand.
		They create the illusion of fighting even after death. In a forest I saw several Germans frozen to death. One was sitting in a tree. He was an automatic rifleman. An retreating the Germans tie them to the tree-tops. They are supposed to shoot but they don't. They freeze.
		No More Crosses
		In the first areas covered by the German retreat you see trim crosses bearing names. They are set up in city squares. The occupants of the graves undoubtedly were buried with honors.
		A dozen miles farther on, the crosses begin to indicate common graves. They bear such inscriptions as "Here lie 18 German soldiers" and "Here lie Lieutenant Erich Schroeder and 11 men."
		Then there are no more crosses. The Germans had no time for burials.
		Here and there a head or a hand can be seen sticking out of the snow. Bodies lie around in cellars and streets.
		Large red army forces have driven a deep wedge into the enemy's positions. The centers of resistance have been outflanked. Cities which the Germans are trying to hold at any price may be expected to fall any day.
		Life Resumed
		I am writing these lines in the ancient town of Maloyaroslavets. I have just returned from the front. Only 10 days ago fighting still was going on in the streets of Maloyaroslavets. Now it is far behind the lines.
		Life in the town has resumed its course; today the electric lights are on again.
		Our troops have advanced far to the west. I witnessed offensive actions in the bitter cold with the sun shining brightly. The snow was blinding. The red army men marched over untrod soil, and at times the snow reached up to their belts.
		On they went without pause, eyelashes silvered with hoar frost, mouths pouring clouds of steam, easy talk enlivening the march. One man wounded in the knee refused to report to the hospital.
		"Lie in bed? Not on your life," he exclaimed. "Why, I would miss the whole show. Their feast is over. Now we are giving it to them for fair."
		"This is a fine frost. It ought to get still worse, like the ones in our parts—50 degrees below."
		It was a Siberian speaking.
		But even the Moscow frosts are more than the Germans can stand. I saw four of them run out of a forest. They were freezing. Tearfully they begged farm women to save them. One pointed to a gaunt chimney, all that was left of her hut which was burnt a few days ago, and said: "You did this job. Now see where you can warm up."
		At the sector of the front where I spent yesterday and today three battered German divisions are defending some strongly fortified positions. These three divisions are doomed.
		Sometimes the Germans succeed in taking with them their trench mortars and machine guns. The rest, artillery and automobiles, they most always abandon.
