

Carmalita Maracci Captivates Crowd

Third of a Series of Concerts Interests Klamath Folks on Friday Evening

Many of the audience who packed the Pelican theatre to capacity Friday evening to see Carmalita Maracci and her dance group went expecting to see a wooden-faced ballerina whirling about the stage in the classical attitudes of the dance, they must have come away with a completely revised idea of what dancing can be. Miss Maracci and her four assistants proved conclusively that young America has plenty of fresh slants on an art that is as old as society—and proved it to the delight of everyone from men who privately confided that they thought ballet dancing was "silly" to youngsters in the audience who artlessly followed the movements on the stage with wide motions of their own hands.

For Maracci herself, this third in a series of concerts being presented by the Klamath Community Concert Association was a personal triumph. Her vivid personality—one of those rare ones which carries straight over the footlights up to the last row in the balcony—seems equal to every interpretation demanded by comedy, by tragedy, by satire. Aside from being an excellent dancer, Maracci is blessed with a face which lends itself to practically any contortion, and a fine unconcern for whether she looks "pretty" or not. Any expression, from one which strongly resembled that of a person with an excruciating tooth-ache to the big-eyed, long-faced mask of tragedy, was grist for Maracci's mill and a marvelous accompaniment to the steps of the dance.

The program, a full one with twelve colorful dances, is difficult to break down into "favorite numbers." What remained with ticket-holders was an impression of intense life and gaiety and graceful movement. Opening with a "Ballet Suite" which gave each member of the troupe ample opportunity to become acquainted with the audience, the program progressed through group and solo dances calculated to give variety that never paled.

Francesca Lopez, Julia Randall and Marie Van Dyke, Maracci's three assistants, convulsed the audience in their roles as beginning ballet dancers in the "Ballet Suite," and Paul Godkin, male member of the troupe, showed an equally fine gift for comedy in his take-off of a dancer in San Francisco's old Barbary Coast.

Maracci's greatest ovation followed her solo flirtation with a hat-rack—taking her turn in the part of man and woman involved in a complicated flirtation, changing her approach according to the hat she had on.

Students of the dance were given ample opportunity to study the ancient as well as the modern art, as the program was a nice balance of traditionally fiery Spanish peasant dances, caprices and straight modern. Maracci herself composed all of the dance steps.

Women in the audience were unanimous in their admiration of the costumes, which fitted the best, looked the cleanest, and possessed more style than is ordinarily hoped for from a troupe engaged in trans-continental touring. Maracci's hats elicited sighs of envy from the feminine contingent and her costumes might well have created a fashion sensation in private life. The costumes were designed by Robert Tyler Lee, and contributed not a little to this highly successful program.

RECENT BRIDE HONOR GUEST TUESDAY

MALIN—Mrs. Emil Potucek, whose marriage was a recent event was honored with a delightfully appointed miscellaneous shower on Tuesday at her new home here. The shower, a surprise, was sponsored by Mrs. Henthorne, Mrs. Eugene Hughes and Mrs. Alfred Shultz. ### "Taxes" Discussed

Toastmistress Club Has Meeting at Fremont Monday

"Taxes" was the subject chosen by Mrs. Frank Peyton for round table discussion at the regular meeting of Toastmistress club Monday evening at Fremont school. All manner of taxes were discussed, from the inevitable income tax to the controversial sales tax which is being scrutinized by congress today. Mrs. Anne Price Hallett with a background of experience in county administrative offices explained intricate problems of taxation.

Mrs. W. D. Miller, toastmistress of the evening, whose subject was "Islands of the Pacific," prefaced her introduction of the speakers with a brief and concise picture of how our national life is interwoven with the peoples and products of these islands.

The Hawaiian Islands were described in a vivid and fascinating manner by Mrs. W. R. Boyd. The story of the one, two and three finger poi was very interesting. Upon the consistency of the poi, depends the number of fingers needed for dipping it from the bowl. One finger poi was made for feast days, two finger poi for ordinary days, and three finger poi was just right for the mother-in-law! The historical background as well as the modern life of the islands was given very entertainingly by Mrs. Boyd.

Mrs. Archie Beckwith presented the Philippine Islands, telling with remarkable detail of the lives of the inhabitants of these islands. The Igorots and Moros are the most primitive and are still quite savage, but the Filipinos now speak almost universally the English language, due to the American school teacher who scattered schools into practically every nook and cranny of the archipelago. In education and public health work unselfish American achievement here is probably without parallel in the history of colonial administration.

"The hot spot in the war today is Java," said Mrs. John B. Cashin, in her talk of that island, known as "The Pearl of the Indies." "Since invasion by the Japanese has long been expected, familiar scenes have taken on a military aspect. The coolie with his baskets of flowers sits under his usual tree, but back of him is a little grassy hillock, with a metal door leading to a gas-proof air-raid shelter."

Mrs. Carl Schubert's subject was the colorful island of Bali, which was described as a self-contained garden of Eden. Famous for their weaving, carving and in the fabrication of objects of gold and silver, the Balinese have succeeded in retaining their own individuality, preferring their own way to life to the usually irresistible charm of civilization.

Mrs. Emmett Chidester was candid critic for the evening, and the usual evaluation of the evening's talks was given by Mrs. W. H. Hibbard.

The president of the club, Mrs. W. R. Boyd, presided. Of special interest is the meeting planned for March the ninth. At this time the entire evening will be devoted to a talk given by Mrs. Hibbard, whose subject is, "Where East Meets West."

This is a story of the romantic and historical background of the age old, "new" countries of Syria, Iraq and Iran, and their rapid change to a vital place in the warring world of today. Members and friends are cordially invited to be present.

MALIN—Mrs. E. L. Gray, Malin, this week announced the coming marriage of her daughter, Winona Logsdon, to Mr. Paul H. Hendrickson, private in the United States army now stationed at Fort Stevens, Oregon. The wedding date has been set for late May, following graduation of the bride-elect from the Malin high school. The young couple will make their home at Seaside.

Program Presented

Nutrition Discussed at BPW Meeting Monday Night

In keeping with the defense program, the Business and Professional Women's finance committee presented a health program for the dinner meeting Monday evening. With Mrs. Emma Carter for chairman, varied numbers made up a delightful and profitable program.

Mr. Lee Jacobs with "Food for Nutrition" impressed upon his audience that the civilian population bears much of the brunt of war as food is a vital factor in winning the war and will write the peace terms at cessation. He stressed the great need for home gardens thereby insuring plenty of green foods for home consumption.

Miss Virginia Reed, laboratory technician from the Klamath county health unit, gave many vital facts regarding "Nutrition for Defense."

Much hilarity resulted from the demonstration of the BPW first aid class. Participating were Isabelle Brixner, Ellen Upp, Inez McCoy, Norma Miller, Eva Cook, Willie Uhlig, Gertrude Tolle, Nedra Hunt, Joyce Ward, Della Stark, Inger Frimann, and Dena Backer.

Lois Rumer presented the new members to the club in a short initiation ceremony.

CHAPTER NIGHT EVENT OF LODGE

The Women of the Moose held a chapter night program in addition to their regular business meeting on Tuesday evening, February the twenty-fourth. The program was presented by the ritualistic chairman, Virginia Babcock and the recorder, Naomi White.

Mr. and Mrs. John McCown and three of their students were presented. Mrs. McCown spoke on correct posture and its influence on everyday life. There was also a talk by Virginia Babcock on her duties as chairman of ritualistic work. Shirley Francis appeared in acrobatic numbers as well as tap, followed by tap dances and stunts by Eloise Woyak and Darlene Price. A reading by Betty Merrill ended the program which was followed by a potluck supper for all members after the business meeting.
