Corregidor-One Headache Haunting Jap War Lords

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the first detailed account of the Japanese air siege of Corregidor, the tiny United States island fortress guarding the entrance to Manila bay. The island came through with flying colors despite some of the most intensive bombing ever undergone by any spot on earth.

By FRANK HEWLETT

CORREGIDOR, Manila Bay, March 10 (Delayed) (UP) — At least 1500 Japanese bombs, mostly high explosives, inter-spersed with a few incendiaries, have fallon on this fortress and the garrison shows not the least sign of faltering.

Countless Japanese heavy, medium and dive bombers have filled the sky, but the destruc-tion has been negligible and beyond a doubt a real disappointment to Tokyo.

ment to Tokyo.

Corregidor, despite the absence of fighter plane protection, apparently has made the cost of bombings prohibitive to the aircraft batteries.

Fires Started Some days they have destroyed a third to a half of the attacking planes.

For hours the enemy has pounded away at Corregidor, causing huge bomb craters and starting fires. But always when the smoke cleared away a check-up showed that the damage was nly superficial.

The Japanese steered clear of Corregidor's anti-aircraft guns until December 29, when 36 heavy and 10 dive bombers raided the island for two hours dumping some 1600 - pound
