

IWA Spokesman Disputes Claim Of AFL Union

Representative George Brown of the CIO International Woodworkers of America, Monday said that he believed 19 AFL challenges in last week's Weyerhaeuser Timber company election were without foundation and covered in Section 6 of the national labor relation board's original election direction. Wilbur Yeoman of AFL's Lumber and Sawmill Workers union had earlier announced that the AFL would protest the election, which has apparently been won by the CIO, on the basis that 19 of his challenges were not accepted by Lewis Penfield, NLRB election agent. Yeoman said that 19 workers, whose votes his union challenged, were only part time employees and that most of them are now working for other employers and will probably not return to the Weyerhaeuser payroll. Brown, in his statement, pointed to the original NLRB direction, which stated that "it appears that many of the construction crew (covering the men in question) return to work each year at the resumption of operations and that the company attempts to reemploy its former construction workers. Under these circumstances, it appears that these employees fall in the category of employees temporarily laid off and that, therefore, they will be eligible to vote in the election under the terms of our usual direction, which includes as eligible any employees temporarily laid off." He said that he did not believe the board would reverse its original direction which had been accepted by both unions and the company. Neither union polled a majority in last week's election because of 14 other challenged votes which were accepted by Penfield. However, because seven of the challenges were

AFL and seven CIO, the IWA-CIO cannot lose the election whatever may be the board's ruling. Moths are always so busy chewing the rag they don't stop to consider how much clothes cost.
