went on the alert against further enemy thrusts.

Brief official reports of these first air attacks on North American soil failed to indicate immediately whether they were mere hit-and-run blows or the opening phase of an organized grand assault on the northwestern stepping stone to Canada and the United States.

But Anthony J. Dimond, Alaskan delegate to congress, gave this warning:

"I am afraid we may have a struggle on our hands to keep that area."

The first attack was by four Japanese bombers and about 15 fighters at 6 a. m. Alaska time (noon Eastern war time) yesterday, and lasted about 15 minutes.

"A few warehouses were set on fire but no serious damage was suffered," the navy announced. "There were but few casualties."

The second raid was made at about noon, Alaska time (6 p. m. Eastern war time) six hours after the initial attack, the navy said. Details of this raid were not immediately available.

Dimond said he had heard nothing direct from Alaska on the raids, but expressed fear that there were too few defending planes to beat back a sustained series of attacks in case the Japanese opened a big-scale offensive such as the Philippines invasion.

Civilian defense leaders at Seattle warned the public to re-check air raid instructions and prepare for a possible blackout. In California the Los Angeles county defense council issued an emergency alert, calling for sharp vigilance and readiness for instant action.

Military authorities at Balboa cancelled all leaves and passes of soldiers and sailors in the Panama canal zone. The alert status there was intensified.

Experts said the Japanese fighters in the first raid must have come from a carrier, but there was a possibility that the bombers came from a land base. Dutch Harbor is about 1800 miles from the northernmost of the Kurile Islands which stretch northward from Japan proper.

and Government Safety Supervision," followed a busy morning session highlighted by talks by Ted Kepner of Tacoma, conference chairman, and Ed Sorger, Tacoma safety engineer. This afternoon open discussion on safety measures was held.

The conference, attended by some 35 western states personnel and safety men, will wind up Saturday. Local millmen were especially invited to attend.

Practice Held by Defense Groups

A sectional practice was held successfully by the Klamath civilian defense organization Wednesday evening.

Hypothetical incidents were a bomb explosion on Washington street, a traffic jam at the O. C. and E. tracks and Ward lane, and a bomb explosion at Homedale and Cottage streets. Groups to handle these problems were called out in quick order and the control center at the chamber of commerce offices was in full operation.

ment. You will find that it makes hardly a dent on your consciousness. A few months ago the mere mention of two hundred BILLION dollars would have given you the shivers. All that matters now is winning the war. Dollars are mere chips on the table.
