

Club Women To Resume Activities

Organization Work To Be Coupled With Defense Projects And Classes

September looms as one of the busiest months in the year for Klamath Falls women and those who have enjoyed holidays at lakes, the Oregon beaches, or in their own gardens. Will resume club work along with the various activities required of women in these days of defense organization and Red Cross classes.

The Klamath Falls Woman's Library club, largest civic group in the city, meets for the first time on Monday, September the fourteenth, in the Willard hotel. We repeat again, this is the annual fall luncheon and flower show and all women of the city are invited to take part. The hour is one o'clock.

Mrs. R. P. Ellingson Sr., who is membership chairman this year, hopes that the memberships will come in a little faster this next week so that she and her committee will be able to enjoy the luncheon and lovely flower show. Just mail the check for dues to any of the following: Mrs. Ellingson, Mrs. Carleton W. Hornbrook, Mrs. Albert O. Roenicke, Mrs. Alfred D. Collier, Mrs. Frank Hamblet, Mrs. Warren Bennet, Mrs. Charles Gilbert, Mrs. A. G. Proctor, the president, or Mrs. Ernest D. Lamb. The committee has been busy on the telephone and it is hoped that, despite the many who have left town, the membership will be exceptionally large this year.

Women of Reames are looking forward to the opening of the fall program at the country club, scheduled for Friday, September the seventh. Golf will be played at nine o'clock, a best nine out of eighteen holes tournament, with luncheon at half past twelve o'clock. Members may bring guests according to Mrs. Wilfred E. Lamm, president. Reservations should be made not later than Thursday at noon with either Mrs. Robert A. Thompson or Mrs. John H. Houston. Cards will be played in the afternoon. The Klamath County chapter, League of Women Voters, plans the first meeting of the season on Tuesday, September the eighth, at two o'clock in the small club rooms of the city library. Discussions should be particularly lively this year what with the war—and all!

The WAVES Roll In

"High-Brows" First to Start Women's Naval Reserve

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. — The Waves rolled into Northampton today, bringing with them impressive records of achievements, well-powdered noses, and a strong desire to do their bit for Uncle Sam as this country's first sailor-ettes.

The first arrivals included a registered medical technologist, a private secretary, a college English teacher, an advertising expert and the attractive daughter of Irene Rich, movie star, who has been doing engineering illustrating in a west coast airplane factory.

This first group, expected to number about 60 over the weekend and 129 by September the twenty-eighth, has been dubbed the "high brows." But no photographers were heard complaining that there were no pretty girls to photograph among the first comers.

They comprise the organizing group to get the women's reserve of the U. S. naval reserve started.

The formal opening class at this feminine Annapolis has been set for October the sixth at which time 900 Waves student-officer candidates will report. About 10,000 enlisted Waves will be trained at three midwestern universities.

Officially the first Wave in was Lieut. (J. G.) Elinor Denton Rich, 33, of Quincy, Mass., a medical technologist, who arrived quietly last night. She is a native of Gloucester, Mass., and a graduate of Emmanuel college in Boston.

The first off the train today was a hazel-eyed girl with a short wavy bob and a happy smile. She carried a large bag and had over her arms two coats, one a heavy cloth one and the other a mink.

"Mother was afraid I might get cold," she laughed.

She was Frances Rich, daughter of Irene Rich, and she flew to New York from Los Angeles. "I've been here lots, though," Lieut. Rich continued, "In fact, I'm a graduate of Smith—class of '31."
