Tom Loughran Buck Private In Marines

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 15 (AP) — Smiling Tommy Loughran, boxing's retired undefeated light heavyweight champion, joins Uncle Sam's marines as a buck private today—and if on some distant battlefield he encounters Nazi Soldier Max Schmeling, the Philly Phantom won't be displeased at all.

The lanky, 39-year-old champ disclosed his enlistment plan last night, and commented, "I'd like to, I'd like to," when asked if he wanted to meet up with the German heavyweight, now a paratrooper reported injured in Crete.

Back in 1931, soon after Tommy turned heavyweight, he challenged the former heavyweight titleholder. But Schmeling, aware of Loughran's speed and skill, refused to fight.

Tommy enters the marine corps in peak physical condition, he says, and ready and anxious for combat duty.

"I want a crack at 'em. In fact that's why I chose the marines."
