Bob Mathews Spurns Eligibility in War

Portland Coach Says Even Pay Students Can Play on Rose City Eleven

PORTLAND, Ore., Sept. 29 (AP)—R. I. Mathews of the University of Portland, one of the far west's oldest football coaches in point of service, today pronounced a wartime sports code for his own and perhaps many another independent school "Eligibility can go hang itself on the nearest tree for as long as this world strife lasts. No boy wanting to play football will be turned down at Portland. Even the pay students can play."

Mathews, a former University of Idaho football coach, gave the amenities of collegiate amateurism the rough side of his tongue: "These boys might be here today and gone tomorrow. War makes for uncertainty. If it's a question of stopping bullet tomorrow then we don't want to set up the barrier that might deprive some deserving lad of a chance to enjoy life while he may."

"Our great country's armed services are crying for physically fit young men and Portland doesn't intend to be slack in fulfilling its obligations. I've long contended that football provides the kind of contact needed to whip a man into shape for all kinds of combat, so we'll get 'em ready with football. Eligibility can go hang..."

Mathews invited the whole 450-man student body of Portland to the football field, promised a chance to play to everybody—freshmen, "pay students," students who are a bit shy scholastically.

Mathews said Portland, besides its varsity eleven, would have a "goof" squad, a "goofier" squad, a "double-goof" squad and as many more as are needed to give everyone a chance to play.
