World war II has left no place for a cheering section of patriotic bystanders. We are all in it with both feet, both hands and up to our necks.—Frederick Hazlitt Brenna, author.

Generally speaking, men are pretty. Also, they are pretty generally speaking.

Heuvel Warns Youngsters to Be Careful on Hallowe'en

Klamath kids will observe their first wartime Hallowe'en on Saturday, October 31, and from all accounts the world at war won't make a speck of difference to the horde of little trick-or-treaters who will drape a sheet around their shoulders and prattle the neighborhood for sweets.

City police officers look upon the antics of the young Hallowe'eners with tongue in cheek, but to the older boys and girls Chief Earl Heuvel issued a warning this week. He said there would be little "foolishness tolerated" and urged them to hold their fire when it came to overdoing the celebration this year. Especially are the older pranksters asked to remember that the replacement of property is practically out of the question and they, too, can confine their efforts to trick-or-treat. One authority suggested that a good way to work off steam which seems to accumulate just before Hallowe'en would be the accumulation of scrap metal.

We may have to take less in order that backward peoples may have more.—Walter Nash, New Zealand minister to U. S.

We shall come to realize finally that a country's military power will be measured by her air strength as it is now judged by the number of battleships and the size of her army. — Rear Adm. Robert A. Peary, polar explorer, in speech in 1917.
