

FUEL DEALERS ASKED TO FILE CEILING PRICE

Anyone selling wood for fuel must file ceiling prices, a recent release from Dr. Blair Stewart, Oregon State price officer, announced today. This group is to include not only those selling fuel as their chief means of livelihood, but includes also farmers who sell some wood occasionally as an accommodation to neighbors.

Dr. Stewart emphasized that the ceiling prices must be the price at which the wood was offered for sale in March, 1942. This price can and will be adjusted if the dealer can show that the March price is causing him hardship.

All filings both for ceiling price and petition for adjustment should be made at the local office of price administration, War Price and Ration board, 434 Main street.

Portland Housing Project Named Vanport City

PORTLAND, Nov. 6 (AP)—The war-worker housing project on Portland's outskirts which soon will be Oregon's second largest community today had a name and a manager.

The 9280-unit project which will house some 40,000 workers will be known henceforth as Vanport City, the Portland housing authority said, and its manager will be J. L. Franzen, city manager of Oregon City for 17 years.

A small helping is plenty when you're getting a piece of mind.

We're In This Scrap!

Riverside school kids will remember World War 2 and the tons of scrap they gathered from back yards and vacant lots. This bunch of Riversiders peek over the top of their first scrap pile. A second one is underway on the school grounds now. Left to right, Glenn Nelson, Harlan Bosworth, Lester Foster, Dick Derby, Richard Hearsh, Rex Ballentine, George Nitschelm, Dwight Vicars, Larry Leochner, Darlene Price, Clarissa Mason, Carol Steiber, Sara Stewart and Ralph Provencal. These children represented the seven grades.

New Grade of Milk Approved

PORTLAND, Nov. 6 (AP)—A new grade of milk which is expected to overcome the shortage in the Portland milkshed had the approval of the city council today.

The new grade, to be known as pasteurized market milk, meets city and federal regulations but cannot qualify as grade A.

RIGHT AT HOME

CORVALLIS, Ore., (AP)—It was only natural that the soldiers should adopt the black bear as a pet.

He wandered into the camp, and when soldiers bribed him with an apple, he posed with the camp hostess, Florence Merriam. He was named Carmichael, after a sergeant.

The bear stole another apple, then made off with a tube of shaving cream. When he was found sleeping in an empty bunk, the soldiers decided to call a halt.

He will be traded for two monkeys.

CLEARING OF SNOW COUNTRY ROADS HALTED

PORTLAND, Nov. 6 (AP)—Motorists who want to go up to the snow country for recreation or scenery this winter will be out of luck.

The State Highway commission made that clear late yesterday in announcing roads used exclusively for such purposes will not be kept clear. The commission said its action was taken because of short funds, military demands for snow-removal equipment and gasoline rationing which will eliminate unnecessary travel anyway.

Convention Stated

The commission received a request from D. H. Peoples, Bend, chairman of the Oregon section of the highway 20 committee, that the Albany-Newport highway via Corvallis be designated as No. 20. This number, he said, is proposed from a projected coast-to-coast highway, of which the Oregon route be a part.

Oregon's delegation to the American Association of Highway Officials convention at St. Louis Dec. 7-9 will be Commission Chairman Henry F. Cabell, Commissioner Huron Clough, Engineer R. H. Baldock, Bridge Engineer G. S. Paxson and Attorney J. M. Devers.

Suit to Cancel Citizenship Filed

PORTLAND, Nov. 6 (AP)—Another of the six Portlanders ordered removed from the western defense zone as potentially dangerous persons faced a suit to cancel his American citizenship today.

Henry Kasbohm, a bakery operator, was the latest defendant named in a suit filed by Assistant U. S. Attorney William Hedlund. Three others of the six ordered out by the wartime civil control administration were named in suits filed earlier.

Portland Faces Meatless Days for Rest of Year--- Hot Controversy Rages

PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 6 (AP) Portland's war-whetted appetite, growing daily as new workers arrive and threaten to pop the city's seams, today faced the prospect of meatless days—not once a week, but for the rest of the year.

Whatever the cause—a dispute rages on that point, only about one week's supply of meat remains under office of price administration quotas for November and December.

Inadequate Knowledge

Gov. Charles A. Sprague wired a protest to Secretary of Agriculture Wickard, also asked Sen. Charles L. McNary, minority leader, to put on pressure in Washington to relieve the shortage.

Morton Tompkins, master of the Oregon State grange, charging Washington with "woefully inadequate knowledge of food problems," said something must be done, and all of the small meat packing firms in the city said that unless it were done right away they would close down and that was that.

Packers Blamed

Meanwhile, Portland's thousands—almost 200,000 more than during peacetime and many of them hearty-eating shipyard laborers—looked on dazed while the controversy over what caused the shortage grew white hot.

Richard Montgomery, Oregon OPA director, blamed the packers. He said they paid little or no attention to OPA's quotas, went right ahead and butchered the rest of the year's allotted supply.

Quotas Rapped

The packers said flatly that OPA's quotas were ridiculously inadequate for the city's mushrooming population, that they couldn't operate on a parttime basis anyway.

OPA quotas, they contended, meant handling an insufficient volume of meat which would preclude running their plants day in and day out. As soon as they shut down for a few days, they said, their labor would quit and take steady jobs in the shipyards.

Maybe They Meant It

So all the small packers got together and announced they would close down—for good—Nov. 13, which would leave only the big Swift and Armour plants operating.

But they hastened to add that they really didn't mean it, that it was mostly big talk to force OPA to boost the quotas.

Today they wondered if they really did mean it and didn't know it.

DISHPAN EARS
SAN DIEGO, Calif., (AP)—Crews of incoming vessels no longer will have to listen to dishpan banging. The pilot boat bell was lost overboard several weeks ago. Since then port Captains H. C. Johnson and Harry Krog have banged on a dishpan during fogs to notify vessels of their approach.

Today Port Director Joe Brennan donated a new bell.
