Kids and Comic Strips

By EARL WHITLOCK

A good many parents seem to find considerable cause for worry in the concentrated devotion which their youngsters give to the comic strips in the paper. The things are atrocious art; they are weird from a literary viewpoint. Some parents feel that the youngsters' attention could well be devoted to more uplifting reading.

Well, perhaps so. But there is something to be said for the comics, at that. They glorify right and condemn wrong, which is a point for their side. They are not sexy—at least not compared to the illustrations in any popular magazine. They make right win over wrong. Their heroes are always brave and resourceful, respectful to the old and chivalrous toward women. Maybe a kid could do worse than to pattern after them, at that.

Our older generation used to read dime novels, out back of the barn and they never did us any harm.

And the strips' interest is not confined to the young, by any means, either. You take any group of 20 people in a coffee shop at breakfast and you'll find about 18 of them reading the comics. These often inane serials of the drawing board are a part of contemporary American life—and many worse influences could easily be imagined.

Klamath Buys $255,000 in Bonds During December

Oregon again leads the USA in war bond sales and Klamath county did its part by purchasing $255,000 of war bonds during December, the last month for which official figures are available. Total state-wide sales equalled $10,787,000.

Oregon's national record is the largest purchase of war bonds in proportion to income of any state in the union. A cool $9.93 out of every $100 of income was loaned to the government to provide equipment for the boys on the fighting fronts.

Oregon has led the nation twice in the last four months, having also been number one state in August.

The state's quota for January is $10,300,000, which is $2,200,000 higher than previously. The quota for Klamath is $317,000. The limit purchase for husband and wife or any owner and co-owner has been raised from $5000 to $10,000 in any one year.

HERE'S Easy-to-Slice Fluhrer's NEW "WAR-MODEL" ENRICHED WHITE BREAD

HERE'S UNCLE SAM'S WAR ORDER TO BAKERS!

To conserve labor and materials in furtherance of the war effort, the Government has instructed all bakers to discontinue certain industry practices. Hence, in bread you buy for the duration, there will be:

- NO SLICING... The convenience of ready-sliced bread must be foregone.
- NO "TWISTING" or "CROSS PANNING"... These baking techniques have been used to assure softer, smoother-grained bread.
- NO "INNER WRAPS"... This means elimination of the extra paper formerly used inside the bread wrapper to further preserve freshness and to add stability to the package of ready-cut slices.
