ERROL DIDN'T GO UPSTAIRS, SAYS M'EVROY

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 26 (AP) — Dapper, neat-mustached Fred McEvoy, speaking in measured British accents, testified that no time during a gay dinner party last September 27 did film star Errol Flynn ascend to the upper quarters of the fashionable Bel Air home where slight blonde Betty Hansen charges she was seduced.

McEvoy, a former hobsled racer, described himself as in the oil business, a part-time actor and a friend of Flynn, in whose company he said he was almost constantly on the night of the alleged offense. The actor is on trial accused on three morals charges by two teen-age girls.

He and Flynn played tennis from about 2 p. m. until 7:30, he testified. Then Flynn changed and assembled with the rest of the guests for drinks. Dinner was at 8:30, and Flynn left soon afterward, McEvoy said.

McEvoy said Betty had left the table during dinner, apparently ill, but that Flynn had remained. Earlier, Private Martin E. Ross, stationed at Camp Cooke, Calif., testified on direct examination that he had known Betty well prior and subsequent to the date last September when she contends Flynn indulged in acts of intimacy with her at a Bel Air dinner party.

He was a bellboy at a Hollywood hotel at the time, Ross testified, asserting that while Betty was a registered guest there only one day, she had stayed overnight there frequently, sometimes as frequently as three or four times a week.

Ross said she visited frequently at the room of one Bunny Baker, about 25, not otherwise identified.

Ross, under direct examination by Defense Attorney Jerry Giesler, said that a few days after the party at which she claims Flynn seduced her, Miss Hansen had told him specifically that she had been intimate with no one at the party.

"Did you ask her if she had had relations with anyone there?" Giesler pursued.

"Yes, I did. I felt like a big brother toward her."

"Did she deny it?" (the alleged relations.)

"Yes, she definitely did."

PASSAGE OF SANITARY RULE INDICATED HERE

Despite one man's opinion that strict and immediate enforcement would close virtually every food handling establishment here, the city council last night indicated its intention of passing the new sanitary ordinance at the final reading next Monday night.

The ordinance was read for the second time Monday night, after G. C. Tatman, representing the culinary alliance, had told the council that his organization was not protesting the measure but that immediate enforcement of all provisions would require virtually all places to close.

Work Toward Ideal
 The city health committee reported it approved the ordinance, which sets up detailed provisions for all sanitary facilities in places where food is handled.

Mayor John Houston said that he believed it advisable to set up in the ordinance ideal sanitary conditions, and then work toward them. He indicated that the city would not expect to enforce to the letter every provision immediately, but would work toward enforcement as the operators found it possible to conform.

Tatman said he did not believe the "bosses" realized the ordinance is coming up for final passage and are not well informed about its provisions. He suggested steps be taken to encourage them to be present at the final reading next Monday.

Bill Endorsed
 Tatman asked the council to endorse a senate bill in the state legislature sponsored by the culinary alliance, which calls for food handlers' physical examinations, the expense to be borne by the state.

The bill calls for examinations every six months, the cost not to be more than $5. After momentary discussion, the council endorsed the measure.

No indication was given as to how much this would cost the state, and the council did not discuss this angle.

The council voted to sell the dog pound property, on Cumberland road, to the humane society for $75.

No Money Made
 Councilman Wissendanger of the judiciary committee recommended the sale. The society had offered $500, but Councilman Cantrall said he didn't think the city ought to try to make any money on the deal, and suggested that $75 be a fair price.

Councilman Bussman wanted to know why the city shouldn't either get a reasonable price for the property, or sell it for $1.

The deal will not be closed until signed by both parties. Under its terms, the property must be used for dogpound purposes.

Mayor Houston asked the council to work in behalf of state legislation to give the city a fairer share of automobile gas tax and liquor funds.

NEGRO HELD IN ATTACK SUNDAY ON YOUNG GOED

SEATTLE, Jan. 26 (AP) — A 25-year-old negro railroad porter who police say they arrested after an attack Sunday on a University of Washington co-ed, was held here without charge today.

He was also questioned in connection with the slaying early Saturday morning of Mrs. Martha Virginia James, wife of a naval ensign, in her berth aboard a southbound train in Oregon. Officers said, however, that railroad officials supported his alibi of having left Seattle Saturday morning on the run to Portland.

Detective Lieuts. F. N. Crawford and W. A. Fuller said the negro admitted the Sunday night attack on the co-ed, Betty Wassner of Longview. The man took her into an alley after offering to help the young woman find a taxi, and there choked her. She broke free and her assailant fled with her purse.

Warmer Weather Staves Off Silver Thaw in Portland

PORTLAND, Ore., Jan. 26 (AP) — Warmer weather in western Oregon reduced the threat of a severe silver thaw today but winter's icy grip tightened in the mid-Columbia area.

The Portland weather bureau reported temperatures rising generally and said the mercury was above freezing west of the Cascades.

Near The Dalles, below freezing temperatures were reported over a small area. There, the Columbia river was frozen over and an ice jam obliterated Celloilo falls as the flow formed ice that built up from the bottom of the falls.

The weather bureau would not release a forecast for publication.
