

What to Plant? Here It Is For You

Fourth of Series Discusses Plain Gardening for the Average Klamath Planter

Fourth of a series of articles, and one of particular interest to the average dirt gardener, appears here with a special appeal for Klamath diggers looking forward to the end of winter and the beginning of seed planting.

In one of the series of Victory Garden lectures being given by Professor A. G. B. Bouquet, to a group of Portland gardeners he emphasized the importance of planning the garden so the land may be utilized to the best advantage. There is no limit to the amount of variety of vegetables the victory garden may grow except those imposed by area and soil conditions. The quality and quantity will be limited only by the thought and preparation put into the planning of these Victory Gardens.

There were a few general rules laid down by Professor Bouquet:

1. A small garden well cared for is better and more productive than a large neglected one.

2. The rows should run in the direction giving the best irrigation and drainage.

3. In irrigated gardens succession or double cropping can be done, or two crops can be grown together. For example, early corn and spinach.

Professor Bouquet mentioned a new bulletin that is being written specifically for small gardeners that will be simple, short and easy to read. It is his hope that every gardener in the state have one of these bulletins and profit by the suggestions given.

In planning a garden the first consideration is for the perennial crop. Asparagus grown in home is without equal, it takes some room but if that can be spared at all asparagus is one of the most satisfactory crops. The first essential for good asparagus is freshly dug plants, second is to get the bed made and planted just as early as possible. March is the month and even in our high altitude it could be done many years but this year this planting may have to be postponed a few weeks. Fifty plants is ample for the average family. Oregon State college has a circular on the planting of asparagus. This should be asked for by name.

Rhubarb should be in every garden. The roots can be lifted and moved with no damage to them. They are forced in the spring by digging a few and moving them into a shed or protected place to sprout. This is the most tender of all rhubarb and is very easily done.

Peas are among the earliest seeds to be planted. Peas need fertilizer and if anyone has any chemical nitrogen left over it is good to apply as a side dressing to the row of peas. They respond with great spirit of growth. Pea seeds should be treated by cuprocide, seeds are scarce and expensive so they should be protected. Put them in a sack and shake them up with either of the compounds until they are well coated. Soaking seeds tends to cause rot and is not to be advised except where the soil is very dry.

Lettuce is considered a lesser crop by the government, but if gardeners are going to plant it it is wise not to plant too much at a time. Lettuce is a cool weather crop. Cabbage is a good crop at any time; it should not be planted at once nor should all the same varieties be used. If far paper discs are put around the plant when it is set out the plants will be protected from maggots.

Good, but not too nutritious, was the description given onions by Professor Bouquet. They can be started from sets, plants or seeds.

Early beets or carrots may be followed by plantings of lettuce. Swiss chard is a fine crop to grow says the professor, even if you don't like it. This is one of the standbys of the war ridden countries of Europe. A very few plants will do and some of the newer ones are very attractive to look at and delicious to eat.

Cauliflower is good but must not be set out too early, or little button heads develop. It really does best when set out in the summer for fall development.

Broccoli has been grown for years in England, and can be grown from seeds and transplanted or the plants may usually be bought.

Tomatoes are probably the most popular to all the vegetables grown, and a full discussion will be given later in this series of articles.

Squash may have to be left out of the smaller gardens, because they take up so much room. However some of the summer varieties which are not squash at all but pumpkins can be used. Some of these are Crooked Neck, Zucchini, and Summer. The stem will tell the tale, in the real world of the stem is smooth and large, in comparison to its length and in the Zucchini and others the stem is grooved and thin and long.

If there is any room at all grow sweet corn. There is nothing to compare with it when it has to come from the market. Successive plantings should be planned of different varieties. Golden Cross Bantam is one of the finest.

In planning a garden the amount of ground must be considered first then the varieties of seeds and the amount of each. Now is the time to get your garden on paper and see what your needs will be.

Garden Board Meets

Group Decides to Make Awards to Horticulturists

At a meeting of the board of the Oregon Federation of Garden Clubs, held recently in Portland, the committee voted to give special recognition to horticulturists of Oregon both past and present. These awards will be given to such men as the Luellings who pioneered the orchards of Oregon, as well as to notable botanists who have added to the horticultural fame of the state by their research, and contemporary men and women who are doing outstanding work in the field of horticulture and hybridization.

The idea was presented to the group of fifteen members of the board by Mr. Dean Collins, who is editor of Garden, the home magazine section of the Portland Journal. The idea of presenting these horticultural awards was suggested by the one given by the Men's Garden Club of America called The Johnny Appleseed prize. This is given annually to horticultural leaders in the entire United States. The Oregon Federation being a state organization will confine its recognition to Oregon.

Before this proposal members heard the minutes of the last board meeting and treasurer's report by Mrs. A. G. Proctor, and various committee reports that she had stationed for re-broadcasting the federation's radio programs in various parts of the state where they could not be heard from KOAC. There have been many requests for a re-broadcast in Portland since there are areas there that cannot hear them.

Corrections to the yearbook will soon be sent out, since there have been some elections since its publication in the fall.

The nominating committee was elected and will soon be announced. Revisions to the constitution were presented by Mrs. John Gayley. These will be sent to the clubs for their opinions, so the delegates to the state meeting to be held in Pendleton in June can be instructed how to vote on them.

The state meeting was also discussed and it was decided to recommend to the hostess club that the meeting be confined to business with the usual tea and other entertainment omitted.

Mrs. E. D. Lamb presided at this meeting.
