Women's Work in War Heard by BPW

Merchandising Committee of Business Women Presents Program at Monday Night Session

Monday, March the first, the Business and Professional Women's club held its regular dinner meeting at the Willard hotel at half past six o'clock. The tables were gay with yellow freesias in crystal vases. After the meeting was opened the boys' chorus of the Junior high school entertained an appreciative audience with a group of patriotic songs, "Camp-town Races," "In the Evening" and "Home on the Range," "Hi-away Home," "Jacobs Ladder" and "Old Black Joe." Their closing number was, "Junior High." President Lillie Darby directed the four-part chorus, with Doris Frederick accompanying.

Suzanne Hamilton, chairman of the merchandising committee, had charge of the meeting and gave an interesting talk on "Merchandising As It Is Today." A humorous skit in conjunction to Suzanne's talk delighted members. Claire Ellis and Edna Haupt were the participants in the skit. Jean Rawlins, who was on the committee, also gave a brief talk on merchandising.

Isabelle Brinxer spoke on "What Women Are Doing to Defeat the Axis," and named ten outstanding points as follows:

First, women must become the main support of the families whose men are in the army, navy, marines, air corps, coast guard, or merchant marine. Second, millions of women not now employed must become part of the labor force as industrial workers, or in essential services.

Third, women engaged in their highest capacity in critical occupations in war industries, or other essential activities, must retain those posts. Fourth, women employed in, or owning non-essential businesses must transfer to, or retain for, war or essential civilian jobs.

Fifth, young women in school and college must give thought to courses that will prepare them for the most essential work they are capable of performing.

Sixth, a sufficient number of women must volunteer for the various military auxiliary services set up by our government to release men for industry or combat.

Seventh, women must feed their families well, despite ever-tightening rations.

Eighth, women must see to it that the children are trained, protected, and cherished as well in war as in peace.

Ninth, women must pay taxes and buy war stamps and bonds to help pay the cost of war.

Tenth, women must inform themselves on world problems, to be able to take their part in building the peace.

This ten-point program for women, if well done, will shorten the war and hasten victory for the United Nations.

The past BPW club presidents will have charge of the next meeting on March fifteenth.
