Synthetic Rubber Production Aired By Vice President

WASHINGTON, March 13 (AP) Vice President Wallace declared today that whether the United States continues to produce synthetic rubber in commercial quantities after the war ought to depend on its ability to meet price competition from a tariff-free natural product.

The vice president told The Associated Press he agreed with Senator Vandenberg (R-Mich.) that the final decision on the maintenance or postwar abandonment of plants now under construction rests with congress. The question hinges, Wallace said, on whether congress wants to protect the synthetic product with a tariff that would raise the price of tires to motorists.
