Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY THE Klamath Yesterdays department on this page today is an interesting reference to a talk made to a local service club exactly

Klamath Union high school. Mr. Emery spent several years in educational and consular work in Japan, and speaking from that experience, he told the Kiwanis club

10 years ago: "The Japanese are tremendously ambitious. They plan definitely to be dominant in the Orient. It is not impossible they hope and plan to be the dominant

EMERY people of the world. They will bear watching by every other nation." Mr. Emery made this prophetic comment in the early stages of the Manchurian incident, which, he told the club, would be prosecuted by the Japanese to a successful conclusion no matter how long it took.

Most of those who heard Mr. Emery's talk probably forgot what he said, although they knew years later that every word of it was

Today's Danger

WHEN we came across that little item, we W gave Lloyd Emery a ring today and asked him for comment. With characteristic modesty, he disclaimed any exceptional perspicacity, but said that anyone in his position could foresee what he foresaw.

As to whether a mistake is being made in United Nations policy regarding Germany as the foe which must first be beaten, Mr. Emery

"I wouldn't pretend to know if this is right. The men who shape that policy have informa-tion that the rest of us do not have. But I do seel that we must give strong heed to the danger that the Japanese will be able to entrench themselves in a position from which they can be ousted only by a terrific struggle. We know they seek to dominate all that part of the world bordering on the Pacific, if not the whole world."

Japanese bitterness against Americans can be laid to several factors, Mr. Emery remarked, including the Japanese exclusion act, envy at U. S. progress and prosperity, and resentment against any interference with Japanese plans

Japs' Good Luck

MR. EMERY voiced a concern over Japanese opportunity to consolidate their gains that is widely felt by observers of the Pacific

The Japs, before and since Pearl Harbor, have benefited vastly by American high policy. Before the war broke out between Japan and the United States, the Japanese continued to obtain from us the materials of war to use against our friend, China, and later against ourselves. Surely, no one can question that there was wholly unjustified complacency to-ward Japan just before Pearl Harbor, giving the Japs a tremendous advantage at the outset

Now, after well over a year of actual war between us, they benefit further by a policy that regards Germany as the No. 1 enemy which must be licked while we, so to speak, mark time in the Pacific. That policy may be necessary, but that does not alter its favorable effect upon the Japanese fortunes of war.

Feeling on Coast

A MERICANS living on the Pacific coast feel strongly on this matter, and for understandable reasons. Recently, we re-printed on this page an editorial from a Washington newspaper which criticized Washington's fascination with Europe and its inclination to under-rate the threat in the Pacific. That indicated, at least, that the concern felt on the Pacific coast is not wholly without good cause.

Another service club speaker we heard recently remarked that it is safe to move evacuees of Japanese descent from the Tule lake WRA project to the Middle West, because the feeling is not so strong there as "in the Klamath

That is no doubt true: but the thought oc curred to us, as we heard the remark, that sooner the people in the Middle West acquired some of that feeling, the sooner we would begin to win the war in the Pacific. That feeling is borne of a realization of the dangerous significance of Japanese designs in the Pacific area, and the bitter struggle our men are making there against great odds. It may be, and probably is, misdirected when applied against evacuees, but it is reflective of a spirit toward Japan that must spread over America if we are to win this war.

Home Front Roundup

By JAMES MARLOW and GEORGE ZIELKE

WASHINGTON, March 31 (AP)—Why does your butcher have so little meat—if any -to sell today?

There isn't any single answer, agriculture department officials will tell you, although probably the immediate reason is that most people did some pre-rationing buying . . . Getting in more of a supply than usual, perhaps buying a whole ham (where available) or other items that'll keep.

These officials list half a dozen reasons back of the whole problem of shortages;

Civilian Buying

EAVY civilian buying: This has been one major cause of rationing, agriculture de partment men say.

It stems from three groups which want more steaks and chops and roasts than in other years-the millions who were unemployed and who now have jobs; those formerly in lowincome brackets who have taken war jobs at higher wages; men and particularly women who have tackled hard manual work and Fido and fines for his owner. whose appetites can't be satisfied with salads and weight-reducing diets.

Then, too, there are families in all classifications who have been buying more meat-they can't buy automobiles, radios, vacuum cleaners and a flock of other war-casualty goods, so they decide to spend their money on better living, have been indulging that taste for thick steaks, for instance.

Reserves Pile Up

SUPPLIES for the armed forces and lend-lease: These take one-fourth of the meat supply, Secretary Wickard says.

the armed forces and lend-lease both are piling up reserves of foodstuffs. The army quartermaster corps states its policies this way

The army buys six months ahead. Its supplies aren't that far ahead, but the foodstuffs come in all during those six months. Generally speaking, the army keeps 60 days' supplies on hand. For troops overseas, this means double that amount—a 60-day supply in the war theater, plus 60 days' supplies at some coast port ready for shipment.

Also, in calculating what is a 60-day supply, the army makes allowances for possible lossin the war theater, for the possibility that enemy attack may destroy supply depots; in preparing shipments, allowing for ship lossesto the extent of double the present rate of loss from submarine, surface and air attack.

The navy's handling of food supplies is generally the same as the army's.

Black Market

BLACK market: Officials say there's no way of arriving at any certain figure on the amount of meat drawn off the regular markets through illegal transactions, but a congressional through illegal transactions, but a congressional committee last month heard testimony that black markets had become nearly as widespread as sale of bootleg liquor in prohibition days.

OPA expresses belief that it has the black markets on the run, now that rationing has congressional committee last month heard testimony that black markets had become nearly as widespread form of dog life. Other reasons: Officials here concede that meat price ceilings, as originally ordered, brought maldistribution of available supplies. In some areas, ceiling prices were higher than elsewhere, Result: Distributors shipped their meat to the areas with the higher prices.

OPA is attacking this problem through the plan of uniform price ceilings. So far they've been applied to pork, will be applied to other meats later.

Hoarding of meat in frozen lockers has been another factor-but an insignificant one, officials declare.

BUILDING A FENCE FOR FIDO Eugene Register-Guard

At least the Eugene city councannot be accused of sitting on the fence in the great season al argument between dog owners and gardeners. The tween White lake and Little Klamath lake. council is emphatically on the side of the gardeners.

However, we have a hunch that "the good neighbor policy" is still going to be quite as important as law in this situation be

1. Fencing is very scarce; wire fencing is not obtainable for such purposes as dog-pens; wood fenc-ing is limited and rather costly. 2. The April 1 deadline for putting Fido in the pen is very In many cases it is going to be necessary to keep Fido on a long leash while rounding up fence materials. Fido may frequently on leash he is almost certain to express his sorrow vocally. There may be those in the neighborhaad who will question bitious people who will whether the vegetables are watching by all nations of worth the price of Fido's mournful soliloquies. Somehow or other we have the uncomfortable feeling that the dog-garden controversy is not ended by this decree, Perhaps the best to be said for the new ordinance is that it supplies a basis for the immediate rounding up and disposal of canine strays and vagabonds. The disposal of pets may prove a much more dif-ficult problem, one requiring much tact and wisdom.

There are those, of course, who would exterminate all forms considerable neighborly kindness toward both Fido and his own ers. Before Fido is turned over to the head-hunters these questions

Has Fido's owner been notified that he is on the loose?

Has Fido's owner made any preparations to keep him in check or to prepare a fence? Is Fido a genuine nuisance and is his owner really negligent?

Dog owners are facing many problems these days, because, among other difficulties OPA has failed to provide any meal tickets for Fido. Many who love dogs are already trying to place them in country homes. This world of total war is not "kind to animals."

The majesty of the law has moved against Fido in Eugene. but in each neighborhood there is still need for kindness. Maybe we can grow gardens and win the war without trampling too who are responsible for much of the "pet nuisance)."

MORRISON, KNUDSON

CASCADE SUMMIT - The section here has been taken over and manned by Morrison, Knudson, laborer contractors. A gang of 10 men arrived from Sacramento Friday. James Hills, who tion here, was appointed fore man. Gene Lavoy, former sec tion foreman here, is now known as "chief track inspector."

The men occupy the quarters built for Southern Pacific sec tion laborers and have a cook and dining room provided by the Threlkeld company, who have the contract for the feeding of railroad laborers. The men are not permitted to bring their families, as living quarters are no provided. The new employes were sur-

It has become increasingly dif-
