

SP EMPLOYEES BUY MILLIONS IN BONDS

About $5,300,000 was invested in War Savings Bonds by Southern Pacific employees through the company's payroll savings plan during the past twelve months, according to Medard Kerr, local treasurer for the railroad.

In addition, several million dollars worth of bonds were bought through other channels. In April alone, while the Second War Loan drive was on, more than $700,000 was invested in extra bonds, it was stated.

Committees on all of the company's divisions are carrying on the solicitation campaign to further increase participation in the payroll savings plan, Kerr said.

Oregon Newspaper Employees Get Wage Increases

PORTLAND, May 17 (AP)—Employees of four Oregon newspapers were awarded pay increases under the government's war-time wage stabilization program aimed at holding the line against higher prices, Dr. George Bernard Noble, chairman of the northwest's regional war labor board, said today.

The approval came under the famed Little Steel formula, which allows a 15 per cent wage boost over pay earned on January 1, 1941, Dr. Noble said.

The Oregon newspaper cases were decided by a special newspaper printing and publishing panel of the war labor board in Chicago.

Seattle Waterfront "Out of Bounds"

SEATTLE, May 17 (AP)—Seventy four blocks of Seattle's south end, running back from the waterfront below Yesler Way, have been declared "out of bounds" for soldiers from Paine field because of the prevalence of venereal disease in the area, the Post-Intelligencer said today.

The paper quoted Mayor William F. Devin as saying Col. C. R. Mein, Paine field commander, the prohibition of men from his field visiting the area would be continued until the district had been cleaned up.

Remember Always . . .
"But this fir baby came through. It took him some seven years to fight up above the fern and other tough ground cover. Then other young firs began trying to crowd him out. He did his mightiest, pushing up a stem and bud each spring, shedding his lower branches. Last winter the Christmas-tree cutters gave him some help, by thinning out a few of the other trees. But they left the thinnings as a fire hazard. Then some boys came along and got careless with fire."

"After all that fight to grow and live, this is his end." The warden stared at the stark, charred branches. "The tree that never grew up," he said. "But if you boys will remember his story and tell it to others, the tree will do some real good anyhow."

P. S.—With the warden's help, the boys got their mountain beaver.

OUT OF THE WOODS

Mountain Beaver . . .
The two boys and their dog had little more than a glimpse of the timber beast before it moved, in a sort of rolling waddle, and disappeared behind a pile of brush and a small fir tree. In that tick of time they saw a lumpy creature, maybe a foot in length, which seemed to have more head than body, more snout than head, and less tail than anything. Andy, the older boy, knew what it was.

"Mountain beaver," he breathed excitedly, as the animal vanished and the dog yapped and leaped for the brush pile. "Never saw one close before—maybe we can catch him. Sic 'em, Rufe! C'mon, Ted!"

The two boys grabbed up sticks and ran after Rufe, who was now barking furiously about the brush pile. It was young firs which had been cut and then left behind by people who had gone into the woods last winter for Christmas trees. A spring drought had left brown needles and small branches tunder-dry.

Sniffing and pawing between barks, Rufe found a hole in the ground under the brush. He quieted down, rooted in, and pawed dirt. Andy pulled the dog back, hunched down, peered into the hole, and finally struck

The last peace treaty was distorted by the fear of bolshevism. I think the average Englishman feels that after the fight Russia has put up, and irrespective of that nation's political concept, we must break down the barriers between ourselves and Russia.—British M. P. Vernon Bartlett.
