

PLYWOOD MEN LOOK FORWARD TO PEACETIME

TACOMA, May 26 (AP)—In the midst of whirlwind production to help supply the nation's military needs, northwest plywood manufacturers looked to the future yesterday and were advised to gear their planning to peacetime markets.

"First, plywood must be produced to help win the war," W. E. Difford, managing director of the Douglas Fir Plywood association told representatives of the industry in annual convention here. "But also you should prepare to reenter the regular consumer market after the war."

Difford's review of the industry and report came after plywood men again named N. O. Cruver of Tacoma, president of their trade association. He is vice president of the Wheeler-Osgood Sales corporation.

Trustees of the all-industry board are T. B. Malarkey and Clay Brown of Portland, J. R. Robinson of Everett and E. W. Daniels of Hoquiam. Daniels also is chairman of the industry management committee.

LEGION COMMANDER URGES POPPY SALE

Men who served in the first World War were urged to be first to put on a poppy on Poppy Day, Saturday, in a message issued today by Fred LaForge, commander of Klamath post No. 8 of the American Legion.

Recalling the service and sacrifice of the men who fought for America twenty-five years ago, Commander LaForge said:

"Poppies, made by disabled war veterans, will be offered on the streets all day Saturday by the women of the American Legion auxiliary. I feel certain that they will be accepted eagerly and worn proudly by all citizens. I urge that among the first to put them on be the members of the American Legion for we, before all others, should understand the significance of the little red flower and should lead the way in paying tribute to the nation's fallen defenders."

Wendell Currier Gets in Left-Handed Slap at Japs By Flying Supplies in India

By THOBURN WIAAT
Associated Press Staff Correspondent

WITH AMERICAN AIRMEN OVER NORTHEASTERN INDIA, May 26 (AP)—There are thousands of queerly-shaped white clouds all around us, and our pilot, Flying Officer Wendell Currier, 21, of Klamath Falls, Ore., dodges them as skillfully as Joe Louis does a potential haymaker.

They aren't particularly dangerous, but visibility inside them is zero. We must see where we're going, because we're on an important mission.

Our target isn't at all like those I've seen while flying in bombers over the western desert, Burma and Thailand.

We aren't going to bomb docks, or arsenals, or refineries, or motor transports, or troop concentrations—or any other such targets that bombardiers dream about.

Constructive Mission
This is a constructive mission—not destructive!

Our target is a remote American outpost, deep in jungle-matted hills where white men are as rare as cobras in Kalamazoo. The Yanks on duty there are many days' march over back-breaking hills from anywhere.

They must be supplied by air—and that's our job for today.

Our plane is full of bundles. Parachutes are attached to some of them. They contain rice, dal (split peas), vegetables, condensed milk, sugar, salt, beans, tumeric (spices), chillis (red peppers), tea, cigarettes, mustard oil and corned beef. On subsequent trips, our plane also will drop mail, reading material, clothing, medical supplies and ammunition.

We are nearing what appears to be a solid wall of clouds, but Currier and his co-pilot, Second Lieut. Ted Carmack, 26, of Brewton, Ala., find a hole and zig-zag into the clear. We can see the hills plainly now. Their primitive beauty is breathtaking. They give me that back-to-nature feeling.

Just About There!
I glance over at the other observer on this trip—Capt. Luther Davis, 26, of New York City, who wrote for magazines such as Colliers, New Yorker, Vogue and Liberty before becoming an air corps intelligence officer. His nose is pressed flat against a window. He's staring intently at the hills. He'll probably write a play about this someday.

"We're just about there," says Private John Budrich, 24, of Brooklyn, N. Y.

"How can you tell?" I ask. All the hills seem the same to me.

"I've done this so often I just know," he replies.

See Target
Now I see our target, a little clearing atop one of the lower hills. These fellows will have to be hot shots to hit that.

Our plane noses down until we're below the higher peaks and close to the trees. We circle the clearing once, then Budrich and his buddies—Privates Edward Potter, 21, of St. Louis, and Joseph W. Aubin, 21, of Sacramento—jump to their positions.

Green Light

They drag the first bundle to the open door of the plane. Carmack flips on a green light signaling them to shove it out. I keep my eyes glued on the bundle. The parachute opens. The bundle floats down gently—right onto the clearing!

We make another run—and another hit! These guys are good.

A different technique is used to drop the bundles without parachutes. This crew is good at that, too. Not all the bundles land squarely onto the clearing, but most do.

Now the plane is empty, and we climb to get over the hills.

I congratulate Currier on the success of the mission.

"Aw," he says, "we do this every day. It isn't the kind of fighting I thought I'd be doing, but every bundle that lands on the target is at least a left-handed slap at the Jap."

THE SIREN'S CALL

KANSAS CITY, (AP)—Fred H. Olander knows the hard life of a livestock commission man.

"I used to spend hours running down herds over the southwest. Sometimes I had to ride horseback and often the herd would scatter when I got near. Inspecting herds was a long, tiresome job."

But that was before he was appointed a member of the board of police commissioners.

"Now I just drive near the fence, begin running the siren and then increase it to a loud wail. The cattle evidently think it's some kind of a glamor moo, and they all gather at the fence."

Engineer Officer Talks to Applicants

Captain William A. Dodd, representing the commanding officer of a special engineer construction group on the east coast, will arrive in Portland, Ore., on Monday, June 7, 1943, to interview applicants for enlistment or voluntary induction into the army corps of engineers. Captain Dodd will make his headquarters at the armed forces induction station, 614 South West 11th Ave., Portland, and will be available throughout the week for interview.

Folks who don't take their time about it do a poor job of growing old.

Take a tip from money—it talks but doesn't give itself away.
