an enemy destroyer ashore in flames. "Our forces suffered no casualties or damage," it was announced. Capo Spartivento lies off the toe of the Italian boot.

Italian Tent Ready The London News Chronicle quoted French reports from Madris as saying an allied invasion of Pantelleria could be expected momentarily and that the shore-bound Italian fleet was "prepared to steam into battle at an hour's notice."

The Italian communique gave no details on the new bombardment of Pantelleria, and Gen. Eisenhower's headquarters said only that allied bombers attacked the island yesterday, along with sweeps over San Antiocho island off Sardinia and over the Aegean sea.

Allied naval forces had previously shelled the island Sunday and Tuesday.

Pantelleria lies 45 miles east of Cap Bon, Tunisia, and is strategically important as a potential stepping-stone for an invasion of Sicily or the Italian mainland.

A Berlin broadcast, discussing two invasion articles in the German army organ Die Wehrmacht, stressed the possibility of allied thrusts into Europe from several directions, and declared: "Germans Expect Invasion"

"An Anglo-American expeditionary force might perhaps succeed in crossing the Mediterranean and landing somewhere in southern Europe, but it would not have the slightest chance in battle against axis continental armies with their millions of well-trained and well-equipped troops."

Coupled with this boast of axis invincibility, the broadcast conceded that the allies "might perhaps succeed in obtaining a foothold at some points on the Norwegian coast for some time."

"It cannot be denied, of course, that the Anglo-American occupation of Tunisia created a new situation in the Mediterranean," the broadcast added.

"It would be foolish to ignore the fact that the Anglo-Americans now are in a position to use the bases in Tunisia for offensive operations against Europe."

Berlin previously had named June 22 as "Der Tag" for the allies' grand assault on Europe.

DEATH SCENE DESCRIBED IN TITUS' TRIAL

residence, took the defendant to Beatty. Pankey returned to Bly, and Cline and a Beatty man named Wilson took the injured man on to Klamath Falls.

Under cross examination Pankey stated that on the evening of February 14, about 8 o'clock someone had told him that "Bill was going to kill Erma" and that he had gone over to the Titus place and stood outside, but hearing nothing indicating any trouble had left to attend a show.

The next witness, Helen Miller, who had been employed by the Titus family to help with the work, said that she was awakened early Monday morning when she heard Titus knock on Pankey's door, he living in the next apartment. She dressed and went across the street, where she saw approximately the same scene as that described by William Pankey.

When asked if she had heard of any trouble before in the Titus family, Helen said that in December, sometime before Christmas, Titus had told her that "if ever I catch them together I'm going to kill them both."

(Previously, a witness had testified that Titus had stated he believed his wife had stayed in Klamath Falls with a man named Desmond.)

Under cross questioning by J. C. O'Neill, Helen said that Titus had told her before that "that man had run off with Mama."

When asked if she thought Titus had been drinking that night, the witness said that she did not think so.

Trip to Klamath Also called to the stand briefly by the prosecution was M. M. Cline, who operated the hotel next door, and who told of taking the injured Titus to a Klamath Falls hospital.

Testimony of state's witnesses opened Wednesday afternoon in circuit court after members of the jury had returned from Bly where they went to inspect the scene of the alleged Titus killing.

Trouble Related Yesterday's chief witness was Mrs. Etta J. Meek, Erma Titus' aunt, who had lived with the couple off and on ever since they were married, sleeping in the bedroom next to Mrs. Titus. The defendant slept in a room behind the liquor store.

Mrs. Meek related that "Erma and Bill" had been having trouble on the evening of February 14. She said that on that evening she had gone to bed early, around seven or eight o'clock, but at nine was awakened and got out of bed when she heard Titus saying "You're all done with me and I know it. I sent my two guns away, but I saved this one for you, and you're going to get it. You know what that means."

Mrs. Meek continued, "Then I went to the bedroom door and looked out. I could see Bill with a gun. I saw Erma standing by him, and he started walking towards her and she backing up until she came to a chair. She sat down. I never heard Erma say anything."

Mrs. Meek said she then went back to bed as she didn't think Bill would do anything, but was awakened again some time later when she heard Titus go into Erma's room and tell her to get up as he wanted to talk to her. "I went out again to see what that means."

vento like the two naval bombardments of Pantelleria was accomplished without loss of a single ship.

No Ship Damaged "Our force suffered no casualties or damage," said a communique issued from the headquarters of Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, allied commander-in-chief.

One of the sunken merchant vessels blew up after being set afire by the destroyers' guns, the bulletin said. Among the attacking force was one vessel of the Royal Greek navy.

United States war planes swept over Pantelleria almost at will yesterday, blowing up one building in the port area and damaging others, and shot up radio installations and bivouacked troops in southern Sardinia.
