prices have to rise and that affects the cost of living and contributes to an inflationary spiral. The way out of this, he made it clear he believes, is to take up the differential through subsidy payments, unless someone can figure out a better means.

The new office of war mobilization (OWM) Mr. Roosevelt said, is going to attempt to obtain closer coordination between the office of price administration, the war food administration and the agriculture department so that decisions can be expedited. He agreed that in the past important decisions sometimes had been delayed a month or two.

Breathless Shoe Salesmen Report Buying Rush

salesman groaned with a pair of shoes in his hand, a woman tugging at his elbow, and lines of customers waiting in the chairs eyeing still more shoes.

Most sizes were still adequately available, although in some lines there were only one or two sizes for each pattern. A dealer in women's shoes reported that customers had been calling for better, higher-priced shoes than normal.

"I was up till 11 last night working on records and I got here at 7 this morning," one salesman said, "and I'm still busy."

Which seemed to be the case in most stores, where salesmen looked forward to more ordinary times at the end of today, when the ration stamp causing all the rush expires.

to the impressiveness of the ceremony, as did the presence of the state guard companies in full uniform, the Commandos, the ambulance corps, and the Sea Scouts. The Legion cooperated in arranging the program.

Many people from Malin, townsmen of County Commissioner and Mrs. Reber, were present for the ceremonies, and Assistant Esquire Robert S. Thompson of the lodge, a resident of Malin, presented Mrs. Reber with a bouquet of red roses from the Malin people.

General Connell pinned the medal on Mrs. Reber after the citation was read by Major Tom Maney, who accompanied General Connell to Klamath Falls.

General Connell, Major Maney and Lieutenant Buckman, another member of the party, left by plane Tuesday morning. They arrived here Sunday, bringing their B-25 down on the north-south runway of the Klamath municipal airport.

Charles Seavey headed the committee which arranged the Flag Day exercises. Other members were L. L. Lombard, Ralph Howard, Glen Evans and Malcolm Epley, Legion Commander Fred LaForge had charge of the colors and the flag-raising.

MASS MOVE TO COUNTRY TOLD IN BERN STORY

removed. Berlin newspapers noted that there was bitterness and resentment among both refugees and their sometimes unwilling "hosts."

Coal Center Afire

A British air ministry communique said the RAF's main attack during the night set big fires at Oberhausen (population 110,000), an important steel and coal center on the Rhine, three miles west of much-bombed Essen.

At the same time, swarms of lighter RAF planes bombed, cannonaded and machine-gunned railways, water transport and airfields just behind the Nazi-occupied "invasion" coast from Holland to northern France.

Eighteen RAF planes were listed as missing.

In the Mediterranean, enemy broadcasts again asserted that allied warships and transports were massing in the Sicilian straits, ostensibly preparing for the grand assault on southern Europe, and declared the fleet was under heavy attack by axis warplanes. Confirmation from allied sources was lacking.

The Rome radio was quoted by the London Express as saying that "a battle which has now lasted for three days and has not lost any of its violence," was raging in a triangular area between Malta, Bizerte and the Sicilian coast.

DNB, the German news agency, asserted that Nazi bombers damaged six allied medium transports and a landing craft off Pantelleria. A previous Berlin broadcast said at least 20 landing barges were sunk in Bizerte harbor among "a large concentration of means of disembarkation."

Jittery Axis

Axis commentators, nervously speculating on where the next allied blow would fall, named Sicily and Sardinia as the likeliest targets and a majority predicted the attack would come this week, now that Italy's last small island outpost on the Africa-to-Italy invasion route has been occupied.

Invasion-jittery Italians received a new jolt to their mounting fears today as the Rome radio warned them to stand by for an allied landing, and declared:

"The decisive phase is approaching. With axis alarms ringing to peak intensity, allied bombers continued their deadly 'softening up' attacks on Italy's immediate outer defenses, centering their heaviest blows on Sicily off the toe of the Italian mainland."

both the refugees and their "sometimes unwilling" hosts.

RESENTMENT against whom? That's a big question. It might be against the British and us for bombing or against the German military leaders for permitting it. No one is flatly sure yet about the effect of bombing on civilian morale.

(BOMBING war factories, transportation facilities, etc., is another matter. That is very real MILITARY damage.)

NAVY SECRETARY KNOX loosens up a little today and tells us that to date since Pearl Harbor American submarines have destroyed and damaged 256 enemy ships.

Our submarine fleet, he adds, is "known to be operating primarily in the Pacific," so it may be assumed that the ships destroyed and damaged have been Japanese.

That's a sizeable total. If your boy is in the submarine service, you can be proud of him.

KNOX says "the eight U. S. submarines reported lost so far" have been replaced "many times over" by new building. That is a fairly tangible statement that so far we have lost eight undersea boats.

Before the war we had 111 subs built and 173 building. Presumably, we have built a lot more since the war began.

KNOX AVERS SUB BUILDING GAINS

cept that it takes an awfully long while to get ready for any kind of "sizeable movement."

Steady Growth
The secretary said that the increase in the American submarine fleet—which is known to be operating primarily in the Pacific—was attained as a steady growth rather than as any sudden building up of the force.

"We have added a small number every month, giving us a steady addition," Knox declared. Another factor explaining the increase in ships destroyed as indicated by yesterday's announcements was due not only to the increase in the number of American vessels on duty, Knox said, but also to the fact that "our men are learning the trade right along."

Before the war, America had 111 submarines built and 73 being built, last naval figures made public, said.

Asked about the enemy's submarine campaign against American and allied shipping in the Atlantic, Knox told reporters that it is "in one of those low periods" characteristic at times of Nazi sub strategy and that "how long that will last nobody knows."

Progress Made
But, he said, the campaign against Nazi U-boats has been going along for some time "in a very satisfactory way, both in number of ships not sunk and in the excess of building over losses."

The secretary declared that 20 destroyer escort vessels, the navy's number one anti-submarine type of craft, are expected to be completed this month and turned over to the fleet for shakedown cruises.

Knox emphasized that in his opinion the campaign against enemy submarines "won't be won until the war is over."

Breaking another of its periodic silences on submarine warfare, the navy said yesterday its undersea forces had sunk a destroyer and 11 other Japanese ships, mostly cargo vessels, probably sank an additional craft and damaged three more.

In another graphic disclosure, the navy told how one of its submarines slugged it out with a Japanese submersible on the surface and sank it.

These fresh triumphs cushioned—and avenged—loss of the submarines Amberjack and Grampus which the navy said last weekend were missing with their crews and presumed sunk.

coming to the Orient, Stilwell replied. "The clearing of the Mediterranean will ease up the shipping situation considerably."

Coordination
Allied action in the Orient, he declared, had been and would continue to be coordinated.

Stilwell, U. S. commanding general for China, India and Burma, arrived here from his globe-girdling trip earlier today.

He praised the support which the Chinese forces on the Yangtze front have been getting from the 14th United States air force. It must have meant a big lot to them, he remarked.

The Chinese armies had been fighting without air support which was particularly hard on them, considering their lack of anti-aircraft guns, heavy artillery and other needed equipment.

It may now be disclosed that Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault, commander of the 14th air force, who went to Washington with Stilwell, arrived back in China on June 4.
