BOOST LOCAL ROADS, SAYS HIGHWAY MAN

A strong hint to Klamath to plug more aggressively for highway development through inter-community organization was dropped in the local civic lap by State Highway Commissioner Arthur Schupp in a talk to the Kiwanis club Thursday noon.

The Klamath attorney, one of the members of a totally new highway commission, told of the powerful pressure exerted by the coast and Pacific highway associations in behalf of the development of those two routes. Noting that communities throughout the length of these two roads were working hand-in-glove for their improvement, Schupp said there is no such organization backing the route through Klamath Falls.

No Road Boosters

"We have an individual chamber of commerce and an individual county court, but no inter-community organization of road boosters up and down the line," said Schupp. The highway commissioner said he was frank to admit he was offering a broad hint, and he hoped the bait would be taken.

Schupp said that Pacific highway boosters had succeeded in getting a four-lane highway constructed over Sexton mountain, to be opened in about 30 days. Eugene, he said, is a strong plugger for Pacific highway development, and has recently received important improvements.

Make Wants Known

Schupp inferentially advised Klamath to make its needs and wants known to the world and to keep plugging through every available means. He said the various projects which had been outlined for work of direct value to Klamath Falls amounts to about $6,000,000 in estimated costs.

The local man said he seeks to represent eastern Oregon, and all of the state, as highway commissioner, but that he felt justified in giving Klamath people the benefit of the knowledge he had gathered through his experience on the commission.

Schupp related that about $100,000,000 will probably be available for post-war highway construction in the first three years after the war. This expenditure, he said, will give Oregon the most modern transportation facilities and should go far in taking up an expected slack in employment.

Frank Howard introduced Schupp as Kiwanis speaker.

Civilian Defense Mobilization

Date—August 6, 1943.
Time—Mobilization call will be issued at 7:30 p. m.
The following units will be mobilized:
Police at regular stations.
Medical at Red Cross headquarters and other regular stations.
Fire at fire station.
Wardens at regular stations.
Utilities as directed by utilities chief.

VOLUNTEERS MAKE DEFENSE COUNCIL

For the past two years the volunteer personnel of the Klamath County Defense council has been quietly going about its job of civilian protection and increasing in numbers until now approximately 1200 men and women of this community are trained in some branch of civilian protection. Without the general knowledge of the public, these men and women have held periodic practices giving volunteers experience as nearly as possible to an actual enemy air raid.

On the whole, these volunteers have been very faithful to dispatch their duties, but it is necessary from time to time to point out the reasons why members of the Civilian Defense corps must be constantly on the alert. Commander of the Defense corps, G. A. Krause, and his staff must know at all times the exact number of volunteers that they can depend upon, and it is with this idea in mind that mobilization of all civilian defense workers will take place Friday evening, August 6, at 7:30 p. m. We Americans are prone to relax our vigilance when good news strikes us. It is true that our forces have made outstanding progress in Sicily and on other European fronts, but the war in the Pacific is far from won.

Oregon is on the front line in any warfare the enemy might elect to carry out in the way of sabotage, incendiary bombing of our forests, or even coastal invasion for the purpose of laying waste our natural resources.

On this mobilization on August 6, we are appealing to all who have now volunteered their services in civilian defense to report to their various stations, and further make the appeal to those who are not giving their time and talents to civilian defense to volunteer these services.

Record Home Canning Pack Uses Glass Jars This Year

Home canners are putting up a record breaking pack of fruits, vegetables and meat for the winter ahead. The estimate is that four to five billion jars of food may be canned. This year most of the "cans" will be glass. The war production board and the glass industry are making strong efforts to provide a large portion of the glass jars needed. But new jars will have to be supplemented from other sources to make up the needed quota. These may be old but sound glass jars used for home canning in past years. All those with cracks, chips, or other defects that would prevent an airtight seal should be discarded.

A second source of jars may be some of the commercial jars in which mayonnaise, coffee, pickles and other food products are sold. To be suitable for home canning, commercial jars must be the kind that can be sealed airtight. Many cannot be reused because special equipment is required to vacuum seal them. A re-usable jar has an opening either 2 1/8 inches in diameter or 2 5/16 inches. The larger size opening is that of a standard Mason jar. Original caps on these jars should be saved to use in sealing them. All old paper lining or sealing compound in them should be removed. New metal disks or lids especially made to fit the smaller size commercial jars can be obtained.

Homemakers will find a variety of lids, caps, and rubbers on the grocery store shelf with which to seal canning jars. Two piece metal caps (lid and screw band) will be a favorite again disk that contains a flowed-on rubber compound. If a separate ring is called for it is important to get the right size. The familiar "shoulder" rubber fits on a jar shoulder—a ledge wide enough to support it. It is larger than a "top seal" rubber that fits on the lid and belongs between lid and jar rim.

War-time rings are being made mostly from reclaimed rubber and need careful handling. They are less elastic than pre-war rings and should not be tested by stretching.
