MAJOR WARNS GROUP AGAINST OVER OPTIMISM

Major Harry Dorman, who has charge of officer procurement for the army in Oregon, warned a group of Klamath people Tuesday evening against unfounded and irresponsible optimism over an early conclusion of the war.

He spoke at the Little Theatre room in the high school building, where he showed a restricted film to the local group.

The major said that talk of the war ending in a few months has a tendency to weaken public support of the war effort and the armed forces.

The officer procurement chief left the city early Wednesday. Lieutenant Johanna Vreedland, in charge of nurse procurement for the army, visited here at the same time and left for Portland Wednesday.

Local men and women interested in officers' commissions or nursing for the armed forces may get in touch with Earl Reynolds, chamber of commerce secretary and OCD coordinator here. He can be reached at the chamber of commerce.

REGIMENTATION and BUREAUCRACY Vs. FREEDOM and INDUSTRIAL INITIATIVE

There was big news just a few weeks back—news of one of the most devastating raids ever carried out by the gallant RAF against Germany.

You remember it, sure. The giant Moehne dam and the great Eder dam blasted and breached by explosive mines, laid by low-flying British planes.

It was a staggering blow. The country for miles around was flooded. But more than that—and here's the main point—the raid crippled the electric power output of many a Nazi generating station. Aircraft and locomotive factories ceased to function. For when a power station is blitzed, it's like cutting a main artery. Machines stand idle, assembly lines stop.

But bombing aside, there's a big—and fundamental—difference between the way power is produced in Germany and America!

In Germany, electric power is produced under the same totalitarian system of bureaucracy that runs everything—that tells you what to do, what to say, what to think.

In America, electric power is produced under the traditions of free business opportunity and individual initiative, where men, working in freedom, can put into practice the rules of commonsense business management.

There you have it: Regimentation and bureaucracy, versus freedom and individual initiative.

How do you suppose these two opposite systems work out?

Today, America produces far more electric power than all the Axis countries combined! But do not waste electricity because it is not rationed.

FREEDOM to us in this country is our greatest heritage—its preservation is our gravest responsibility.
