ROGUE FOREST RECEIPTS HIT RECORD HIGH

Receipts from the Rogue River national forest during the fiscal year ended June 30, were $247,405, the highest of any national forest in Oregon, according to Forest Supervisor Karl L. Janouch. Since federal property is not taxable, 25 per cent of the receipts from each national forest is turned over each year to the state and is prorated on an acreage basis to counties containing national forests for the benefit of the public schools and public roads. Janouch said that Jackson county will receive approximately $29,000 and Klamath county, in which other national forests are also located, will receive a total of $41,700 under this arrangement.

Due to war time conditions which increased the cutting of national forest timber, the receipts of the national forests in the North Pacific region were much higher than for any previous year. Janouch said that there had been unusual demands on the Rogue River forest for timber, especially in the winter months when logging is restricted to only a few areas, in order that the local mills might carry on production to fill war orders.

He said, however, that every care is being taken to see that this heavy drain does not impair the future timber supply so that local industry will not be impaired after the war. Other sources of revenue from the forest include the rental of land for special uses and the grazing of livestock, which is also war contribution since it produces meat, wool and leather.

PUC RED TAPE CUT TO HELP SPUD MOVING

Desiring to be helpful in providing facilities for moving the Klamath potato crop and other produce in which time is pressing, Public Utilities Commissioner George H. Flagg is ordering hearings to be held in Klamath Falls on less than statutory notice. Cutting the legal red tape will enable truckmen to expedite service by several days and to haul many additional loads.

The plan calls for examiners representing the commissioner to be at 619 Pine street, Klamath, on Wednesday, August 25 to conduct investigations of the various applicants. One application is from Tim T. Sullivan of Malin, who will take on contracts for potato hauling, and another is from Robinson's Delivery service. The latter serves the district in 25 miles radius of the city, but wants to broaden out to take in all of Oregon for delivery.

It is expected that other applicants will be up for investigation at the same time. The commissioner seeks information from the public as to how it can best be served and voluntary witnesses will be listened to.

WP BUILDS SIGNAL TOWER AT KEDDIE

Preliminary construction work on a control tower has been started by the Western Pacific railroad at Keddie, Calif., in the Feather river canyon. This tower, costing $10,000, will be used in operation of the $1,300,000 automatic traffic control system to be installed in the Feather river canyon.

A warehouse, 30 by 80 feet and costing $4000, has been completed at Keddie to store critical materials to be used in building the signal system.

Signal crews are to start work on the system as soon as materials are received.
