Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY ALL TOO OFTEN, Klamath's important visitors fail to see the great, productive irrigated farming area that is back of this town.

They roll in here over one of the routes that misses or only skirts that area, spend their time in town, and go on their way without observing first hand the crop farming development that forms an essential part of any complete picture of Klamath's economic background.

But we have had enough experience with visitors from Western Oregon to know that this farming development, seen for the first time and particularly at this season of the year, surprises and deeply impresses them.

There is no better way to inform these people than to show them what is going on first-hand. It is unfortunate the highway commission trip was not planned so these men could spend at least a few hours in a quick glimpse of the farming activity from here to the southern limits of the Klamath basin in Northern California.

The Road Meeting

TO GET BACK to the road meeting itself here Friday night, we felt that Klamath's program was effectively presented and we believe there is every reason to expect results when the dam is opened on highway development after the war ends.

There is some tendency, at such meetings, to stick pretty closely to separate specific projects and to assume that the highway commissioners know the broad general picture of Klamath's place in the state and coastwide highway systems.

But we do not believe any opportunities should be missed to call that broad picture to the attention of the highway authorities and the general public.

Advertising Roundup

By DELBERT ADDISON THERE are certain words we use that have a good ring to them, no matter how they've been kicked around for generations. Others, the opposite.

Take the words "volunteer" and "regulation." Quite a difference, isn't there? These words bring up different meanings to different people, but the feeling they give is the same to all.

The fellow who voluntarily gives up beating his wife is a hero. But the fellow who gets regulated—thrown into jail for wife beating—he's a pitiful object and a so-and-so to boot.

The volunteer is the hero, right enough, and the government was smart enough to choose the volunteer Minuteman as the symbol for taking our money away from us in the form of War Bonds.

Your Conscience Only

GETTING down to cases—the biggest volunteer program the country ever attempted will get underway soon. It is the Third War Loan.

As M. L. Johnson stated in his bond ad the other day, "Buying war bonds, like getting up in the morning or seeing your barber—or your dentist—is between a man and his own conscience."

Advertising Ready

THE TREASURY, of course, puts the pressure on newspapers to get the advertising sold, and furnishes advertising material. But it's public spirited citizens, the same ones that carry the drive in each community, who actually are responsible for the ads being run.

Dr. Masters' Health Column—

Call for Nurses' Aides to Be Part of Victory Drive

By THOMAS D. MASTERS Of all the voluntary services open to women in the war emergency, that of nurses' aides is probably the most directly practical. The need of the armed forces for trained nurses is enormous and has not yet been filled.

The OCD and the Red Cross have combined forces in recruiting and training nurses' aides. A course of study is given these volunteers, which amounts to 80 hours, with subject matter to cover defense problems.

The nurses' aide is exactly what the title implies. She does not replace the nurse, but assists her, and though she lacks the professional training to work independently, she can do many things requiring strength and skill, such as ordering the patients' surroundings, helping with equipment and supplies, and generally improving the Warner, former secret service guard assigned to the treasury department, has been awarded the Distinguished Service Cross for the unprecedented feat of shooting down seven axes planes on a single Flying Fortress mission over Berdini, Sicily, on July 5.

The War Today

By DeWITT MacKENZIE

The extraordinary enthusiasm being exhibited by the allied nations over the appointment of Lord Louis Mountbatten as supreme commander for southeast Asia is at once a tribute of confidence in his leadership and an expression of relief that, as the Chinese put it, "Measures planned for the destruction of Japan are being implemented."

Small wonder that the Chinese are elated at the prospect of reopening the Burma road, to restore their lifeline to the outside world. They were terribly disappointed that the operation wasn't carried out last winter, as I learned on my visit to Chungking the first of this year.

The Chinese are in dire need of supplies of every description, both military and civilian. It's one of the world's wonders that they've been able to hang on so long. It would be dangerous to bank on their ability to continue indefinitely without the major assistance which can be supplied only by the reopening of the Burmese back door.

Readers often ask why the allies have to invade Burma by sea—why the invasion can't be carried out from India by land. The mountainous nature of the terrain, and the heart-breaking jungles, along the Indo-Burmese border preclude big scale military operations. There are places where small contingents of troops can operate—on the coast, for instance, and up north where a military road cuts through the mountains at Imphal—but the main attack must be amphibious, supported by air.

The youthful new commander for southeast Asia has, in his always vigorous way, flung his six-foot-four of hard muscle into his new job with a rush. That's good to see, but we shouldn't conclude from the announcements and the preparations that an invasion of Burma is going to take place next week, or next month.

Penalties Imposed by Detroit OPA

DETROIT, Aug. 28 (AP)—The office of price administration yesterday imposed penalties against nine persons it accused of violating price regulations, in one instance revoking a family's war ration books until December 31, 1944.

Frederic S. Glover Jr., of Cleveland, OPA regional hearing commissioner, assessed the most severe penalty against Mrs. A. D. Wilkinson of suburban Grosse Pointe, one of a group of socially prominent persons accused of making illegal purchases.

Numbers will be presented by Al Woodruff, pianist; Fred Ross, singer; Mary Mahoney, singer, and Dolores Morrigh, accordionist. Auctioneers will be Lynn Roycroft, master of ceremonies, and Bill Sweet, Myrtle C. Adams and Paul Lee.

Legionnaires said that bonds bought through Monday will count on the August quota.

WMC Works Out Terms to Use War Prisoner Labor

By CHARLES MOLONY WASHINGTON, Aug. 28 (AP) Terms for increased use of the one growing supply of labor—prisoners of war—for non-war jobs have been worked out by the war department and the war manpower commission (WMC), with the stipulation that the reservoir may be tapped only where efforts to recruit other labor prove unavailing.

With a mounting number of requests for prisoner labor in lumber cutting, pulp and paper industry work and farming, it was suggested authoritatively that many prisoners could perform these jobs. The army has reported there are around 100,000 prisoners in this country.

Hitherto, the war department has contracted directly with employers in a relatively few cases for the service of prisoners, but the new agreement is expected to expedite hiring arrangements and fit them more closely into the picture of general labor needs.
