

BUSCH TAKES BIG TULANA BARLEY CROP

TULELAKE — Anheuser Busch company, St. Louis, was the successful bidder for 110,000 sacks of Hanchen barley raised this season on Tulana farms, operated by Ben and Dick Henschel, Malin and by Liskey brothers. While the price received for the grain was not made public by Raymond F. Welsh, buyer for the company, reliable reports are that the malt grain in this area has brought better than $3 per hundred.

The same company also purchased 50,000 sacks grown by Shuck brothers, and 30,000 sacks raised by Lewis Kandra. These crops were grown on Tulelake lease land.

This year's crop of barley in the Tulelake basin is reported to be one of the finest ever grown here, weights being reported in many fields to be running as high as 56 pounds per bushel.

Damage from early frosts in the basin was negligible and harvesting was completed under ideal conditions with little moisture to darken the grain.

The huge crop is being moved to market as speedily as possible to permit concentration on potato and beet crops that many of the growers also have under cultivation this season.
