

YOU CAN'T HAVE HUNTING Unless You Protect Our Forests..

A Successful Hunt in a Klamath Forest

Given a favorable habitat with adequate food, water, shelter, and protection from natural enemies or man, game production can be maintained at the maximum. The forests of Oregon provide those requisites. Without the forests there would be no deer, elk, or bear.

Hunters should keep this thought in mind when they take to the woods this fall. A neglected camp fire, a warming fire left burning, or a carelessly discarded cigarette or pipe heel may spoil some of the best game area in Oregon. The safest way is to leave the smokes in camp. Deer have a keen sense of smell.

Here's hoping you bag your deer, but don't destroy its home. You may want to hunt next year.
