Newspapers Same Here as New York

Someone in New York sent us a copy of The Villager, printed weekly in Greenwich Village and carrying much the same kind of news you find in your daily paper here at home. There's a column devoted to animals called "Scopy Mewses"; want ads such as—"British author residing in Village seeks young American woman collaborator for new project. Must have sound knowledge of American slang"; a food department called "The Villager's Culinarian" in which Mayor LaGuardia urges the eating of more eggs, and all sorts of ads even one advertising goat milk.

Along with this there is a weekly column all about the comings and goings of people under "The Town Crier" which simmers down to the fact that newspapers are much the same. Klamath Falls or Nooawk.

In the April issue of the Associated Press Inter-Office, staff news bulletin for the AP bureau, is another little "small-world-indeed" item. On the back cover is a layout of pictures entitled, "Honors For Front Line Press." There, as life, is the Southwest Pacific staff and standing right next to Asahel Bush of our own. Photographer Ernie King who made so many friends among the newspaper people during the November riot at the Jap camp. Asahel has the same grin but a new waist line.

Two mothers we know have worked out a swap-plan so that they can do their stint at Red Cross headquarters this summer. One mamma will take over the little people while the other goes to surgical dressings, and when they reverse the procedure, might work out under the check system with each mother taking her turn at keeping an eye on the busy chicks.

Right now the Commandos are making a survey as to the needs of the marines.

Cards mailed early this next week will reach Mrs. Maurice Hart of Medford at Sacred Heart hospital. After that she will be at home at 922 South Portland.
