HOTEL SLATED FOR FRIENDS OF MILITARY

A nine-room house at 73 Pine has been leased by the Soroptimist club to be run as a sort of informal hotel where relatives of servicemen stationed here may stay when they come to visit a soldier, sailor or marine.

The Soroptimist club will take possession of the old Will Humphrey home on July 1 and shortly after that date renting of the rooms will be started. Since the building has been used as a rooming house the past few years, most of the house is already appropriately furnished and there will not have to be much renovation before the project can be begun.

Most of the furniture already in the house is included in the three-year lease. The Soroptimist club has only to provide furniture for the living room, dining room, and one bedroom. Members of the organization said that anyone who has any furnishings of this type they would like to donate are welcome to do so and any articles will be most appreciated.

Under the present plan, a time limit of 10 days will be put on each tenant who stays at the Soroptimist club house. This is so that a larger number of persons can be served. In the case of wives visiting their husbands in service here, the husband will be allowed to stay overnight at the house if it does not interfere with military regulations. Mrs. Twyla Ferguson is to live on the premises as house mother.

Plans are underway to serve coffee and donuts at various times throughout the day and servicemen will be invited to come for refreshments while their relatives are staying at the house and afterwards if they wish. There is to be a piano and books in the living room for servicemen's use. The venture girls will assist in this project.

Members of the Soroptimist club hope that this plan will in some measure alleviate the housing problem which visitors to Klamath Falls encounter. The Soroptimist club is an international service club for women. New president of the organization here is Mrs. Sheldon Brumbaugh and retiring president is Mrs. Rose Poole.

Vocational Rehabilitation Program in Development

Dr. Hugh G. Grant, rehabilitation officer for the veterans administration in Oregon, was a visitor in Klamath Falls Friday and Saturday in connection with the rehabilitation program now developing under his direction. He addressed the Rotary club at noon Friday and on Saturday visited the high school to study the possibilities of using facilities there in the rehabilitation work.

"The Veterans Administration, of which General Frank T. Hines is administrator in Washington, D. C., and Dr. Paul I. Carter, manager for the state of Oregon, and myself, vocational rehabilitation officer, is now developing a program of vocational rehabilitation for the seriously disabled veterans of World War II in the state of Oregon," said Dr. Grant.

"The work is now in its infancy since the war is still on and the major battles are still ahead," he pointed out. "So far, relatively speaking, only a small number of seriously disabled veterans have returned to their home in this state.

"However, as the big battles are fought overseas, resulting in hundreds of thousands of casualties, thousands of Oregon veterans, wounded in battle and otherwise disabled, will begin to return to their homes.

"These are the boys and girls whom the Veterans Administration under congressional law will attempt to assist through vocational training programs in Oregon designed to enable these young men and women to overcome their handicaps which have been brought on through their war service, enabling them to return to gainful employment and able to compete with able-bodied persons.

"While the program is federal in scope, the work of vocational rehabilitation is decentralized in the states. These Oregon veterans are therefore being called to Portland for conference with the vocational rehabilitation officers who have the authority to plan vocational training programs.

"The program provides that institutions already existing in Oregon such as trade schools and colleges will be utilized in the training of Oregon veterans. The Veterans Administration does not contemplate establishing any schools of its own. In addition to institutional training, training-on-the-job will be utilized in many cases, since this type of training is more feasible in some instances than institutional training. A third type of training is a combination type, on-the-job during the day and in night schools, for instance.

"Following the completion of training, the Veterans Administration officers through the cooperation of business, professional and labor groups in Oregon will endeavor to assist the disabled veteran in placement on a job for which he has been trained, and which he can carry on successfully in spite of his disability.

"We are therefore presenting the program to various civic organizations throughout the state such as the chambers of commerce, Rotary, Kiwanis, Lions clubs, and similar groups with a view to soliciting cooperation of these groups, both collectively and individually, in the matter of providing job training facilities and later, jobs for the disabled veterans.

"I have visited the principal towns and cities of Oregon during the past few months since our rehabilitation office was established in Portland, explaining the program to civic leaders. The response has been magnificent, these leaders in these cities, including Klamath Falls, offering training facilities in many cases and pledging their full cooperation with the Veterans Administration in developing this program of constructive vocational assistance to the young men and young women who have made great sacrifices in this war."
