Today's Roundup

By MALCOLM EPLEY

ACTION of the state supreme court in upholding the conviction of Robert E. Lee Folkes as the "Lower 13" train murderer, virtually closes a case that was a nationwide sensation with a definite Klamath angle. Barring a re-hearing, there remains only the detail of carrying out the penalty imposed by the lower court.

EPLEY

This blood-curdling incident broke on the consciousness of Oregon and the nation one winter morning, when the wires carried the first reports that a navy bride had been brutally murdered in a sleeper berth on a southbound train near Albany.

The locale of the murder was a moving train, and before the forces of law could get organized, the train had crossed the snowy Cascades and had reached Klamath Falls. It was held here for several hours for searching and examination of the cars, and questioning of passengers and crew. It was here that evidence was gathered pointing to Folkes, a dining car second cook, as the possible murderer, but he was not arrested until the train reached Los Angeles.

The trial was held at Albany, in the county where the actual slaying occurred. District Attorney L. Orth Sisemore of Klamath county, as a special prosecutor, assisted in the successful handling of the state's case against Folkes.

The case was one that put Oregon justice to the test before the nation, because of the widespread publicity it received. The color issue, which might have arisen in a less tolerant state, had no part in this matter. The trial was soberly and fairly conducted, the result was carefully reviewed by a most competent and fair-minded supreme court, and the unfortunate and gruesome case now approaches its end with justice vindicated.

Kimball Forest and Park

THERE has been a widespread response to our suggestion that the Yawkey tract, now a state forest, be re-named in memory of the late Jackson F. Kimball, pioneer Klamath timber man. A number of local organizations have supported the proposal, and commendatory messages have come from Portland and other outside points.

The matter will be before the state board of forestry on June 27. We hope for a favorable decision, and we feel that both the forest itself, and the park area around the head of Wood river, might well be named for the late, beloved Klamath man.

We had occasion recently to drive through the Yawkey tract, which, among foresters, is regarded as one of the finest Ponderosa pine growing areas in the west. The tract is really a northern, wooded extension of the beautiful Wood River valley. Although it has been logged, there is still considerable timber there, with many park-like vistas and beautiful Sun creek adding to its attractions. The possibilities of Ponderosa reforestation here are great, and what is to be done along that line would have pleased Jack Kimball immensely.

Enough, Please—

REASON for that woody feeling we've had for so long was suddenly clear to us last night when we heard Eddie Burroughs do a swell job of singing "Trees."

Remember, that line about the tree that "intimately lives with rain?"

A dozen years or so ago we left the Willamette valley for a brighter Klamath climate and joyfully bade farewell to Willamette valley weather. Now the darned stuff has caught up with us.

Some time ago we met Cattleman Bill Dalton down by the Pelican, after several weeks of early spring drought.

"Pray for rain," said Bill.

We did, and ever since we've been praying it would stop. But the Lord just heard us the first time.

Maybe it was a prayer from bearded scribe named Epley, at the suggestion of a robed herdsman named Dalton, that started the deluge which set Noah afloat.

News Behind the News

By PAUL MALLON

WASHINGTON, June 21 — Mr. Churchill must have been in a good humor when he hopefully predicted the end of the war in Europe this summer.

The most respected military authorities here share the hope that the European end is a matter of months, but they are not predicting. To them this is just the beginning of the final military operations. These are the early stages of the planned crushing blows.

Look at the front pages. The operations which formerly were reported in two or three different headlines now monopolize practically all the columns, so far flung have the battlefields grown in the past week. And they will grow more.

As daring as the European invasion, was the attack upon Saipan. Up to that point, we had been merely on the outer fringes of the Jap defensive line. With that thrust, we plunged into the very heart of it, bypassing all the naval strongholds dotted out southward and eastward in the Pacific (Truk, Palau, Yap, etc.)

Brilliant Strategy

THERE was not the usual island hopping, but an enlightened and brilliant strategy designed to put our bombers within easier range of Tokyo and over all the Jap shipping through which she sustains her war empire.

It was feasible only because we have been dominating the sea lines and thus could supply such an advanced force, or at least have the right to suspect we can, because we put war ships and transports safely into action there with the invading force. Unless the Jap fleet comes out of hiding to fight a decisive battle, that condition will continue.

The details of the fighting were at first held back, probably even from Washington, because this is only one knife thrust in a general scheme of attack, just one phase upon which further developments rest. Consequently, it must be assumed the authorities wisely awaited a decisive break in the fighting.

Stiffest Resistance

SO also with France to some extent. The bulk of our army has been held out of Normandy, in a similarly threatening manner. In Italy, the nazis are attempting from time to time to stiffen their resistance at a few strong points, but at other times, they are soft.

Thus it is impossible to guess accurately on the end of the war. So much depends on factors concerning which we may have an opinion, but which are not facts, such things as German military and civilian morale on which there are oscillating signs, the missing Luftwaffe, etc. And in the Pacific, the real attack has just started.

Dummy Luftwaffe?

IF the robot plane assault on England is the dummy Luftwaffe Her Goering was addressing with a plea to fight to the death and there is no other, the robot attack itself is a sign of German desperation. It is a silly method of warfare, for which the only excuse is a desire to spread consternation with indiscriminate killing and destruction.

The British were so upset about it because it is psychologically disturbing even to the imperturbable to see those aimless plane-loads of explosives flying overhead, uncontrolled at a rate of about 15 or more an hour, day and night. But, from a military standpoint, it is only an attack upon impregnable British courage.

The rocket planes are constructed cheaply, but must use much material which goes into planes, and every one shot out fails to come back. Therefore, intrinsically, it is just a very expensive, aimless expenditure of material by a nation already on the verge of defeat for that very reason, and so short of air material that it has not been able to put up an air force.

Five Million Men Overseas By 1945, Says McNarney

WASHINGTON, June 21 (AP)—Lt. Gen. Joseph T. McNarney, deputy chief of staff, won't predict when the war will end. And, although this country will have an overseas fighting force of 5,000,000 men by the end of the year, "the movement will likely continue at a high rate during 1945."

McNarney's testimony before the senate appropriations committee considering a house-approved $48,107,785,795 measure to finance the war department during the fiscal year starting July 1 was made public today.

"I wish I could tell you how long it will take us to liberate Europe and to crush our foes in the Pacific," he told the senators, but "no man can at this moment predict with accuracy the time it will take."

"I can assure you, however, that as our forces go into battle, they have every advantage which it has been humanly possible to provide. That they will win is certain. We hope that it can be done in the minimum amount of time with the minimum number of casualties, and at the minimum expense."

"We have today the greatest army the United States ever mobilized. It is well-trained, equipped with superior weapons and deployed world-wide. It is now definitely on the offensive on all fronts."

McNarney said the 3,698,000 soldiers now deployed outside the United States exceed by more than 1,600,000 men the peak overseas strength in World War I and are only 350,000 men short of equalling the entire strength of the army at the close of the last war.

The officer testified that the army is making every effort to keep boys out of overseas in at least 19.

Senator Gurney (R-S.D.) remarked that "we are getting quite a kick back" because, he said, the war department made "a very definite statement" when the draft age was reduced to 18 that youths of that age would be given at least a year's training before being sent overseas.

Reports kept coming in, Gurney added, of boys who have been in the army only a few weeks finding themselves fighting in Italy with the result that the good faith of the war department as well as the law-makers is being challenged.

McNarney said he believed an examination of the record would show the war department never had promised that no 18-year-olds would be used as replacements, but added:

"I have a rule in the army ground forces that no young man under 19 years of age assigned to the infantry, will be sent overseas. If he is in an artillery unit or service unit that rule does not apply."

He noted that army service forces get about six months' training but that they are not normally engaged in active fighting.

In some instances, he said, younger men were taken from replacement training centers and sent overseas but that was because of enforced demands at the front and the fact that selective service did not call or furnish 18-year-olds for several months.

The NATS (naval air transport service) was formed five days after Pearl Harbor with a nucleus of seven planes.

WHEAT

CHICAGO, June 21 (AP)—The pressure of a record wheat crop and prospects for heavy yields of all small grains were felt in the market today and all grain futures were lower in a bearish and quiet trade.

Commission house liquidation, hedging sales and indications that less wheat may be required by distillers of industrial alcohol, tended to lower prices of futures of that grain.

Wheat suffered losses comparable to other market grains, but the wheat production board may abandon plans to require distillers to use about 50 percent of the wheat in the manufacture of industrial alcohol.

Wheat closed 1/2 to 1 1/2¢ lower than yesterday, July $1.54 1/4. Oats were 1/2 to 1 1/2¢ lower, July $1.07 1/4. Barley was 1/2 to 1 1/2¢ lower, July $1.21 1/4.

TAYLOR'S LEAD INCREASES IN IDAHO BALLOT

BOISE, Idaho, June 21 (AP)—Glen H. Taylor, former cowboy minstrel and strong supporter of President Roosevelt, appeared certain of Idaho's democratic U. S. senate nomination today as official returns from 17 outlying precincts in Idaho county brought his lead over incumbent D. Worth Clark to 178 votes.

With 838 of 845 precincts reporting, Taylor held 10,722 to Clark's 10,544.

With only seven of the state's 845 precincts—three in Boundary county and four in Cassia county—still to report, it appears unlikely that Clark can pick up the votes necessary for his renomination.

Secretary of State George Curtis said the official county canvass returns were coming in so slowly that the state board of canvassers would be unable to meet until Monday. It is supposed to meet Saturday and certify the results by Monday.

Ruth Moon of Pocatello appeared to be democratic nominee for state treasurer, with a 138-vote lead for 807 precincts over Cora Stevens of Twin Falls.

James Keating of Harrison held a 151-vote lead in 810 precincts in the race for republican secretary of state, nomination against Myrtle Davis-Wicks of Boise.

BULLETIN REPORTS KLAMATH DISEASES

With 90 per cent of the doctors reporting, Klamath county showed two cases of mumps and 14 cases of gonorrhea for the week ending June 10, according to the health bulletin issued by the Oregon state board of health.

The most noteworthy item in the bulletin was the total of 66 cases of syphilis reported for the state at large. It was the highest total for the disease registered since venereal disease was first reported in Oregon on a weekly basis, early in 1943.

Scarlet fever throughout the state fell off 71 per cent during the week, touching the lowest point for this disease since last November.

Measles came up slightly last week, although it was 42 per cent under the 1944 peak which was reached last month.
