WORLD SECURITY PLANK RETAINED

CHICAGO, June 27 (AP)—The republican platform committee approved today a foreign policy plank retaining the pledge, criticized by Wendell Willkie and others, to enforce future world security by an international organization employing "peace forces."

It rejected protests of Willkie and 15 republican governors that this language was not sufficient to insure peace.

The platform group inserted a promise that the party would approve efforts to bring home members of the armed force "at the earliest possible time after the cessation of hostilities."

Committee officials, releasing only a portion of the platform immediately, said it would be laid before the convention during the afternoon. They hoped to complete the draft during the day.

A fight on the foreign plank might be carried to the floor by some of the governors who asked for more specific pledges.

In another portion of the platform dealing with the maintenance of postwar armed forces, however, the committee approved a provision some members interpreted as a gesture toward those, like Willkie, who have been demanding that the United States join an international organization with military force to preserve peace.

The platform declared at this point for "the maintenance of postwar military force and establishment of ample strength for the successful defense and the safety of the United States, its possessions and outposts, for the maintenance of the Monroe Doctrine and for meeting any military commitments determined by congress."

The latter pledge to have armed forces available for any use approved by congress suggested the possibility of a military allotment to an international organization to enforce peace, some said.

As it was approved by the committee, the foreign plank pledges prosecution of the war to "total victory" and proposes to achieve peace aims through international cooperation and not by joining a world state.

It favored "responsible participation" by the country in a "co-operative organization among sovereign nations" to prevent aggression and said such an organization should develop effective cooperative means to direct peace forces to prevent or repel military aggression.

Willkie, the 1940 presidential nominee, tossed a grenade at the committee's language last night, asserting the plank's opposition to a "world state" might be interpreted to preclude American participation in any effective world organization. He urged that the term "armed forces" be substituted to the tentative draft's "peace forces."

WARREN GIVES CHALLENGE TO GOP CONCLAVE

CHICAGO, June 27 (AP)—A challenge confronted the republican national convention today from its keynote speaker, Governor Earl Warren of California—a challenge to "put indispensable principles—once and for all—above indispensable men."

Warren, widely talked of as the choice for the vice presidency, addressed a sweating, shouting audience of thousands in Chicago stadium last night and nowhere did his words bring a more tremendous ovation than the mention of indispensable principles and men.

"We are here," Warren said, "to make the road on which America can march toward victory, toward opportunity, toward peace. Certainly, we are not here to look for a road back to some status quo."

The lean, gray Californian, grinning his appreciation, got a tremendous hand when he said later on that in Washington, where the bureaucrats live, there still is a democrat in the White House; "but out where the people live, the country is predominantly republican."

Warren listed this as the republican job:

1. To get our boys back home, with speed and victory.
2. To open the door for all Americans, to jobs and opportunity.
3. To make and guard the peace so that it will endure.

"A better world for others," the governor declared, "must begin with us."

National chairman Harrison Spangler described the keynote speech as "an inspiration to the millions of American people who are determined to deliver this country from the new deal."
