

DR. ROBBINS VISITS CLUB AT TULELAKE

TULELAKE—Professor Wilfred W. Robbins, governor of the 108th district of Rotary International and a member of the staff of the college of agriculture of the University of California at Davis, visited the Tulelake Rotary club Wednesday. Dr. Robbins spoke during the luncheon hour and met for a night meeting with officers of the club, committee chairmen and Rotary members to hear reports of activities and to offer suggestions for club improvement.

Dr. Robbins, who, prior to the war period, visited 13 European countries, reminisced for his audience, recalling the contacts he had made at Rotary club meetings during his travels.

In England at a luncheon session he introduced himself to a guest seated next him and found that he was conversing with the late William Allen White, Emporia, Kans., newspaper editor.

He found Rotary fellowship over all of Europe, citing as an example a gathering of Rotarians in Germany where he was the only one present who did not speak German. In deference, those around the table all spoke English.

He commended the Tulelake club for the fine spirit of fellowship shown, for the excellency of their meeting place in the annex of the Tulelake Community Presbyterian church and upon the food which was served by the church Guild.

The Tulelake club will again sponsor a Rotary Institute of International Relations, bringing four speakers here during the late winter or early spring. The program was instituted here last year.

Visiting Rotarians for the luncheon were Godfrey Blohm, president of the Klamath Falls Rotary club, A. H. Bussman and Lee McMullen, Klamath Falls. Guests were Rev. Hugh T. Mitchellmore, Klamath Falls; Lt. Harry Galloway, here on furlough; Milton Morse, Tulelake; Marvin Thomas, Tulelake; Lt. James E. Foley and Captain Frank T. Prout, both of the prisoner of war camp.

Americans Must Win Back Freedom in Postwar Period, Says Senator Guy Cordon

It must be the determination of all Americans to win back after the war, the individual freedom necessarily surrendered for the duration, U. S. Senator Guy Cordon told an overflow community dinner audience at the Willard hotel last night.

Senator Cordon said that the exigencies of war called for lodging in some one the authority for quick, decisive action, and that he would not criticize this concentration of authority.

However, he said, the American form of government calls for maximum individual freedom, and how to get it back is a major problem for the post-war period. He declared this is not a partisan question.

Senator Cordon, who was appointed to the senate by Governor Snell, following the death of Senator C. L. McNary, steered carefully away from partisan politics in his talk. He is running for election in November to succeed himself, and his opponent in November will be former Mayor Willis Mahoney of Klamath Falls.

Senator Cordon told his audience that "you don't find out all about being a United States senator in a few days or six months." The problems of the office are many and complex, he said, and one can just hack away at them, never catching up with all of the work to be done.

He said that he believes the post-war public works program is shaping up, and will provide an employment stop-gap that also brings improvements of lasting benefit.

Cordon said he is proud of Oregon's record for good employer-employee relations during the war.

He recalled a recent congressional hearing in Portland when the CIO spokesman proposed a constructive sustained-yield timber program for Oregon, and an

AFL spokesman called attention to the Oregon record for good labor relations, expressing the hope that labor and management could continue after the war to settle their differences with a minimum of federal government participation.

These labor contributions to the hearing, the senator said, testified as to the constructive attitude of labor in Oregon.

The senator spoke at some length about the "G. I. bill of rights" before congress. He outlined its general purposes, and said that through it "I think we can fulfill our obligations to our fighting men and women."

Frank Jenkins introduced Cordon, and L. O. Sisemore, director in charge of the forum committee of the chamber of commerce, presided. An incident of the evening was the meeting of Cordon with an old Roseburg school acquaintance, Mrs. Fay Durbin of Klamath Falls, who produced a Roseburg high school annual of the period when Cordon was going to that school.

Approximately 170 men from the Marine Barracks are attending classes daily at Klamath Union high school, studying the various types of mechanical work pictured above. The educational program, unique in the armed services, was devised by the marines' commanding officer, Col. B. Dubel, and approved by Lt. Gen. A. A. Vandegrift, marine corps commandant in Washington, and has been put into operation with the assistance of Arnold A. Gralapp, superintendent of schools.

Two groups of men attend the classes, one detachment in the morning and the other in the afternoon, five days a week. Civilian teachers do the instructing, and the facilities of the vocational department of Klamath Union high school are used. The marines have their choice of studying machine shop, welding, radio and radio repair, aviation and general sheet metal. A typing class is in operation at the Barracks school building, conducted by a civilian instructor.

This school project for the marines was planned for the purpose of rendering the men more valuable to the service, teaching them a trade or occupation which will be useful while in the service, and be a tremendous asset in their rehabilitation and readjustment to civil occupations upon their return to civilian life.
