 Governor John W. Bricker, winding up a two-day tour for Washington's eight votes, asserted today, "I was very encouraged." Bricker said at a press conference in Vancouver, Wash., on his way to Oregon, "I had a feeling when I came here, I am very encouraged."

MACHINERY COMPANY OPENS BRANCH HERE

Recognizing the importance of Klamath Falls as the heart of a vast southern Oregon and northern California trading area, the Loggers and Contractors Machinery company of Portland and Eugene has announced the opening of a branch in this city at a temporary location at 709 South 6th. After January 1 it is planned to move into more commodious quarters at 732 South 6th.

The branch here will be in general charge of George W. Schriver, with Robert L. Berke serving as parts and service manager. Both Schriver and Berke have had many years of construction and logging machinery experience.

The Loggers and Contractors Machinery company is one of Oregon's oldest and largest machinery houses, being organized in 1910. It is owned and operated by A. F. and C. I. Sersanous with J. M. Meany in charge of logging sales.

The company represents many of the leading logging and construction equipment lines of the country.

These include R. G. "Bob" LeTourneau's famed line of dozers, scrapers and heavy road machinery, etc. LeTourneau was labeled the "heaven and earth man" in a recent Reader's Digest article.

Portland, Oct. 12 (AP) — America's automobile manufacturers design cars for women—not for men—the president of the Society of Automotive Engineers said today.

And what women want isn't performance, but appearance. William S. James told the Oregon meeting of the society. "The public, to the automobile maker, is women," he said. "If the women don't like it, the poor husbands have a tough time."

James, chief engineer of an automobile manufacturing firm, predicted a postwar automobile differing only slightly from 1942 designs. War production, except for technical manufacturing methods, has not developed improvements applicable to peacetime vehicles, he said.
