

WOMAN ESCAPES DEATH FROM FIRE

Mrs. H. L. Wimer of Fort Klamath narrowly escaped death when fire destroyed her home Sunday afternoon. Mrs. Wimer, who had been ill, was asleep at the time and neighbors were forced to break a window and carry her from the flaming structure. She suffered minor burns about the face.

The Calico Cat restaurant, not in operation at the time, was also destroyed, as were outbuildings on both properties. Cause of the fire was not determined. Wimer is operator of the Shell station in Fort Klamath and was hauling wood at the time. The Wimer's son, Donald, was hunting and neighbors gathered to assist the family. All belongings were lost. The Klamath Agency fire truck arrived and saved the Riessen rooming house.

and butter, ice cream and cake, and plenty of hot coffee.

Night's Menu

A visit to the galley gave us a whiff of what would be on trays that night. Meat balls and spaghetti in a darn good sauce, were being whipped up by the kitchen crew.

Feeding such a crew of men, operation of a kitchen which puts the stuff out for distribution three times a day, is no housewife's dream. Capt. Lewis took us through and this is what we saw.

A gleaming galley, stainless steel, chrome and aluminum in shipshape, steam kettles big enough to bathe the Quins in, and locker and cold storage rooms crammed with the makings of good food.

4-Man-Tables

The mess hall is 410 feet long and 110 feet wide. It will seat 2000 men at one time, served cafeteria style. There is a departure from the old style bench and long table idea, and the four-man-table is an innovation which makes for good conversational eating. From the time a man gets his food on his tray, sits down and eats, he has consumed some 22 minutes and a lot of chow.

Trays, eating utensils, cups, soup bowls, all are made of stainless steel. Thirty-five men are involved in the preparation of the food and early chow is at 11:30 a. m., and serving continues until 12:30 p. m. This is the dinner hour, or main meal.

Steam-Cooked

Back of the mess hall dining room, the work of getting the chow ready goes on hour after hour. Eight 80-gallon, and eight 60-gallon steam kettles cook most of the food. There are 16 big meat ovens and a bank of 22 electric ranges. It must be quite a sight on flapjack morning to see those plates covered with sizzling batter.

Various cold rooms keep food stocks at the proper temperature. The thermometer registers 35 to 45 degrees in the room where yeast, eggs, butter, cake mix and that stuff is kept. The vegetable room is kept at 40 to 45 degrees and the meat storage room is around 15. Here hung a week's supply of beef, prime stuff, and for a lady struggling along with the rest of the week, it was heart breaking.

Good Coffee

Coffee at the Marine Barracks, whether they think so or not, was good. Three cups, good and black, and it still tasted good. Capt. Lewis said that he buys Brazilian coffee, grinds it fresh for every meal, and brews it up in 480-gallon batches. The tantalizing odor of freshly-ground coffee greeted us in one large room where a big grinder was going to work for the night meal.

We even toured the garbage room. Here the refuse is separated, wet and dry, sold to a Klamath Falls outfit for hog food. By the time this transaction is over, the quartermaster's office figures a loss of less than eight ounces of food per man per day. That's better than most people do at home.

This story could go on forever. The marvel of the toasting machine that seems to be the answer to a prayer. Eight of these toasters operate on one of those never-ending chain deals. The section where the staff non-commissioned officers eat at the west end of the mess hall. The hot food conveyor which they ship over to sick bay for those on regular diet. The scullery where they wash the utensils at 120 to 140 degrees and rinse them at 180 to 200 degrees. You'll have to carry on from here yourself. There's a paper shortage on.

Some folks will say we hit two days when the food was good. The fellows that still grip will read this and say it sounds like a screwball dame that thinks everything is "just ducky." It stands to reason you can't prepare food for 2800 men with the dash of a salad for two.

We just took two days out of two weeks and here it is!
