

ATES ALLOW OLLIN TO BUY, QUOR, PLANTS

YMPIA, Oct. 19 (AP)—Harry Collins, Toledo, Ohio financial adviser, who negotiated the sale of southern distilleries last year by the liquor boards of Washington and Oregon, was asked to repurchase certain distilleries at prices $920,000 less than cost the liquor boards, according to an audit of the transactions released by State Auditor Yelle last night.

Yelle states that Collins and the state boards entered into an agreement before the distilleries were purchased by Collins. Collins was allowed to buy 487,246 gallons of bulk whiskey for $228,026 which had cost the states $975,953. The distillery plants at $334, which had actually cost the $506,936.

Becket, liquor board chairman, said last night that he did not see the audit but "whatever the audit says, the cost of the state of Washington will make 8 to 10 million net from this deal."

Commenting on some of the aspects referred to in the audit on other points, Becket said that all transactions had been reviewed by the attorney general's department before they entered into.

According to the audit the liquor board and the commission negotiations a year ago when Collins purchased the Kentucky distilleries, Waterford and the Shawnee Distillery company, by acquiring the capital assets of the company, and agreed with the state to sell back to him 10,000 barrels of two-year-old whiskey and the plants of the company at "book costs," which were $920,048 below actual cost.

The audit states that in the purchase of the distillery the states assumed a gross liability of $9,506,327. This sum was reduced by assets acquired in the transaction to $1,872,916. The office of price administration enforced reduction of the price to $7,466,699, thus saving the states more than $1,000,000, according to the audit.

Servicemen's Jobs Predicted Difficult To Find After War

PORTLAND, Oct. 19 (AP)—L. C. Stoll, state manpower director, said at the opening of a three-day conference here yesterday that the United States employment service will not find it easy to fit servicemen into their proper niches after the war.

Stoll told 50 Oregon office managers and veterans' representatives that there will be fewer jobs for more workers because the state's war industries can't continue at "full blast forever."

He said three measures would bring the postwar employment situation to a head; namely, lifting of manpower controls from management and labor, return of the 40-hour week and eventual return to a normal two-shift-per-day basis.

Claiming that $300,000 was paid to the government for storage rights in the Owyhee reservoir, the plaintiff alleges the government in 1930 diverted the water to lands not included in the company's contract with farmers in the area.

District Court to Hear Water Case

PORTLAND, Oct. 19 (AP)—The U. S. district court here will hear the suit of the Owyhee Ditch company against the government, a case that originated in an eastern Oregon circuit court.
