Klamath Folks Pay Visit to Station

Folks who have pressed their noses against the outside of a window in had a chance to visit the Klamath naval air station in observance of Navy Day. Men on duty showed extreme interest in the volley of questions which were put to them. Many who were detailed to stand by the planes lined the concrete.

Overheard one rusty-haired sailor tell an elderly lady the "chute he held in his hand" didn't open, the pilot can't complain and get a new one!

The sailor, white cap on the side of his head, said, "Lady, you going to ask any more?" We said "no." He said "You know what I just asked me?" pointing to a bright yellow Piper airplane.

That was the Yellow "Piper" used in the last war! The mess hall had coffee, doughnuts, trays of cookies were being consumed. We understood that we weren't going to be any more, and it still worries the local gentry ate up the coffee for supper.

Next Tuesday night the goblins in smitchee will be roaming the woods for loot. There's a lot of practicing going on in the section.
