Milk From Coal Mine Supplies Nazi Town

ALSDORF, Germany, Nov. 24 (Delayed)—(AP)—This American-occupied German town has been getting its milk supply from a herd of 25 Holstein cows 1200 feet under the ground.

Coal mining is the chief industry of Alsdorf, but right now the outstanding products of its principal mine are fresh milk, pork, veal and mutton.

The cows, some pigs and sheep were taken underground by the townspeople in late September to protect them from shellfire and bombs and from other Germans who wanted them. The town is still under intermittent shellfire and the animals remain safe and sound inside the mine.
