Pravda Attacks U. S. Newsman For Article

Moscow, Dec. 11 (P)—A commentator in the communist party newspaper Pravda today attacked William L. White, American correspondent and son of the late William Allen White, famous editor of the Emporia, (Kas.) Commentator David Zaslavsky based his attack on excerpts of White's forthcoming book, "About Russians," as published in the Reader's Digest. White accompanied U. S. Chamber of Commerce President Eric Johnston to the Soviet Union last summer.

Zaslavsky, asserting White's conclusions were drawn during that trip, called the correspondent an obscure American newspaperman of "doubtful reputation," and said that the book's conclusions were "the usual stew from the fascist kitchen, with all its smells, calumnies, ignorance and hidden anger."

Vicious Dog Blamed For Mutilating Body

RAINIER, Ore., Dec. 11 (P)

RAINIER, Ore., Dec. 11 (P)—A vicious police dog rather than foul play was blamed today for the condition of a mutilated torso found in a lonely cabin three miles west of here.

A headless body, found by a neighbor boy, was tentatively identified as that of George Wroe, 60-year-old inhabitant of the cabin. Wroe had suffered a stroke recently, neighbors said. Police advanced the theory that Wroe died from a second stroke, and that his dog, running wild and hungry, decapitated the man and buried the head in the woods nearby. A bone, possibly a man's jawbone, was found in a nearby field. Police were unable to approach the dog, roaming alone in the hills.
