Hausen Stuhm and Tokemit on Frisches Haff (agoon along the Baltic coast) had also been captured. Muhlhausen is another important rail center on the line to Konigsberg, East Prussian capital.

In a third order of the day, Marshal Stalin announced that Hindenburg, six miles northeast of Gleiwitz in Upper Silesia, had been captured by Russian forces. With a population of 126,000, Hindenburg is the largest German town yet captured by the Russians.

Hindenburg is an industrial center and important communications point and in Stalin's words "a powerful stronghold of German resistance."

Marshal Stalin announced that four more towns on the southeastern approaches to Konigsberg, capital of East Prussia, had been captured.

Marshal Gregory K. Zhukov, leaving Poznan to be cleared by the infantry and artillery, carried the ground war closer to Berlin than at any time since the beginning of the war. At its closest point the Brandenburg frontier is only 91 miles from Berlin, capital of the province as well as of the reich. But where the two main roads between Poznan and Berlin cross the border the distance to Berlin are 106 miles in the north and 95 miles in the south.

BRONZE STAR GIVEN TO KLAMATH WOMAN

The Bronze Star for meritorious service has been awarded Natalie E. Gould of the American Red Cross, according to word received here from the war department by Miss Gould's sister, Mrs. Lamar Townsend.

Miss Gould made her home in Klamath Falls in 1937 and, at that time, was employed in the law office of U. S. Baientine.

The medal was given for meritorious service in North Africa. The citation said that Miss Gould "displayed courage, tact and tireless energy in planning, directing and supervising the extensive recreational program which contributed greatly to the morale and welfare of the patients."

"Miss Gould was severely injured near the end of the Tunisian campaign but refused transfer to a base hospital and performed her work of caring for sick and wounded service men prior to her complete recovery."

At that time she was assigned to the 77th evacuation hospital and later was transferred to England and subsequently participated in the invasion of France. She is now somewhere in France with a club mobile unit.

Mrs. Townsend hopes to make a trip to her former home in Maneo, N. C., when her sister receives leave to return to the United States.

vided to be present or to be represented at any of the above times and places, particularly the officials of any state, county, city, town, or local association whose interests may be affected by the plans under consideration for development of the river system. They will be given an opportunity to express their views and to present any pertinent information and data and to suggest changes considered desirable and to discuss the plans under consideration. All pertinent matters so presented will be given consideration in the final preparation of the report. Reasons should be advanced to justify statements presented and the text should be confined to the subject under consideration. Oral statements will be heard, but for accuracy or record, all important facts and arguments should be submitted in writing as the reports of the hearings will be forwarded for consideration by the reviewing authorities. Written statements (six copies) may be handed to the undersigned at the hearing or mailed to him beforehand. Legible reduced copies of maps and prints are acceptable when their substitution for the originals will reduce the bulk of the submitted material.

The plans tentatively being studied at this time contemplate the storage of flood waters in new reservoirs in the upper Klamath and the Trinity river basins and the diversion of the developed surplus waters to the Central Valley Project of California for future hydroelectric power and irrigation use.

It has been found that the construction of a large reservoir on the Sprague river to supplement the existing storage on Upper Klamath lake would develop an adequate and dependable supply for all the ultimate water needs in the basin above Keno and would also provide additional surplus water for diversion via the Klamath-Pit route. In this scheme of development, the controlled waters would flow through existing natural channels to Lake Ewauna at Klamath Falls. From this point, a portion of the surplus waters would be routed through a main conduit following the existing waterways to Tule lake and thence through diversion works into the Pit River basin.

Other surplus waters would be routed in improved natural channels through Klamath straits near Holland or Ady to permanent wild-life refuges on Lower Klamath lake and thence through the existing drainage tunnel into Tule lake, where they would join the other waters in the main conduit.

Consideration has been given to the Trinity-Sacramento diversion for supplying additional irrigation water to the Central Valley project and for developing hydroelectric power as contemplated in the California State Water Plan. The utilization of conservation reservoirs on head-water streams of the Trinity basin and on other tributaries of the lower Klamath, primarily for improving and propagating migratory fish life in the lower basin, together with the wild-life problems of the Upper Klamath basin, are under joint study with the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service and are considered as very important elements that need to be properly evaluated before any final conclusions and recommendations are reached on plans of development for the entire watershed.

It appears that the Klamath-Pit and the Trinity-Sacramento diversions would be economically feasible when the need for additional irrigation water supplies develops in the Central Valley project of California. Hence, the primary purpose of this investigation is to set forth and properly evaluate all of the important elements, with a view to formulating a program of efficient conservation of the diverse water resources of the entire Klamath watershed. It is hoped that a useful report can be prepared that will serve as a

We home fronters still have a notion that if we hadn't been quite so confident—if we had been a little more cautious—we might not have suffered such a setback in Belgium.

CZECHOSLOVAKIA, Austria and Italy will be good points to watch. If the Germans are fairly confident of their ability to HOLD at the Oder, they will stay put in these countries, which have important war production facilities.

But if they are as scared as their radio SOUNDS they will begin to shorten their lines to the southeast and the south.

At least that seems like a good guess.

to the Siegfried line in the center of the western front.

Potential Springboard
The Roer banks provided Gen. Eisenhower with a potential springboard for a decisive lunge into the forests of chimneys of the German Ruhr and Rhineland.

(The river possibly is frozen. Zero or near zero weather has prevailed most of this week. The Germans repeated speculations of a new allied offensive, and told of Americans massing west of Julich, 25 miles west of Cologne. Russian writers also said that an allied drive was perhaps imminent.)

Win Pillboxes
With flame throwers ready but with field batteries saving their strictly rationed shells, the 102nd Ozark division advanced up to four miles on the ninth army front. They seized 97 Siegfried pillboxes, some 10 feet thick, in a sector from 10 to 18 miles inside Germany.

"British patrols just north reported they reached the Roer on a front of several miles without contacting the Germans," AP Correspondent Wes Gallagher reported from the ninth army front. "This clears the second army sector west of the Roer and liberates the Sittard sector of Holland."

Offense Halted
On the opposite flank of the western front, Lt. Gen. Alexander M. Patch's 7th army appeared to have brought the new German offensive in North Alsace to a standstill. AP Correspondent Robert C. Wilson reported.

The Americans sealed off penetrations by seven Nazi divisions and slowly hammered the line back to its original positions in fighting during one of the worst snowstorms in Alsace since the war started.

House fighting continued in Schillersdorf, 10 miles north of the Saverne gap, allied lifeline to imperiled Strasbourg. Wilson said the Germans were being herded into the southeast sector of the town.

Omera was employed for a time as clerk at the Lake hotel, and also as clerk for E. C. Jerrue of the Klamath hotel. He moved to Medford several years ago and was employed at the Crater rooms there.
