Our Home Town

Washington's Birthday
By EARL WHITLOCK

Truth is an excellent thing. It is too bad that, in our search for the truth, it has been necessary to de-bunk many of our national heroes. We know now that expression is a movable and determination which stamps the pictured features of the Father of our Country, was caused by the pain of keeping an uncomfortable set of false teeth firmly in place. We are told that the incident of the cherry tree never happened. Which is all right for us adults, because we can't rightly judge Washington's character and appraise its greatness without these aids.

But how about the kids? I wonder if that cherry tree table under which a great many youngsters to greater truthfulness. I wonder if the mental picture of Washington, his face set in an unchangeable calm, has not influenced a great many grown-ups ought to think several times before they destroy dear myths of childhood. There are times when the whole thing can be more harmful than beneficial.

Next Monday, Mr. Whitlock the Earl Whitlock Funeral home will comment on "The American Attitude."
